Supreme Court Warns Bureaus To Curb Powers

Tells Federal Agencies Not to Take Arbitrary Authority.

SEC Loses Appeal On Jones Inquiry

Tribunal's 6-to-3 Ruling Holds Commission Went Too Far.

By Felix Bruner.

A stern warning against assumption of unconstitutional power by Government administrative bureaus and commissions was uttered yesterday by the Supreme Court in deciding a case against the Securities and Exchange Commission. The court did not decide constitutionality of the securities act.

In a 6-to-3 decision, the majority opinion written by Justice Sutherland said:

"Arbitrary powers and the rule of the Constitution cannot both exist. They are antagonistic and incompatible forces, and one or the other must of necessity perish wherever they are brought into conflict. To borrow the words of the former Mr. Justice Day, 'there is no place in our Constitutional system for the exercise of arbitrary power.' To escape assumptions of such power on the part of the three primary departments of the Government is not enough. Our institutions must be kept free from the appropriation of unauthorized power by lesser agencies as well.

Must Limit Encroachment.

"And if the various administrative bureaus and commissions, necessarily called and being called into existence by the increasing complexities of our modern business and political affairs, are permitted gradually to extend their powers by encroachments—even petty encroachments—upon the fundamental rights, privileges and immunities of the people, we shall in the end, while avoiding the fatal consequences of a supreme autocracy, become submerged by a multitude of minor invasions of personal rights, less destructive but no less violative of constitutional guaranties."

The case was that of J. Edward Jones, New York dealer in oil royalty participations, against the SEC. Jones had filed application for registration of $100,000 in securities. The commission started an investigation of his application on the ground that it contained misstatements, and after a subpena had been issued for his records he attempted to withdraw his application. The commission attempted to continued the investigation, but Jones refused to obey the subpena on the grounds that withdrawal of his application ended the case. The commission appealed to the courts. The Circuit Court of Appeals of the Second District upheld the commission's contention that it had the power to go ahead with the investigation. The majority opinion of the Supreme Court reversed the lower court.

Cardozo Writes Dissent.

The dissenting opinion was written by Justice Cardozo and concurred in by Justices Brandeis and Stone.

"The opinion of the court reminds us of the dangers that wait upon the abuse of power by officialdom unchained," Justice Cardozo wrote. "The warning is so fraught with truth that it can never be untimely. But timely too is the reminder, as a host of impoverished investors will be ready to attest, that there are dangers in untruths and half truths when certificates masquerading as securities pass current in the market. There are dangers in spreading a belief that untruths and half truths, designed to be passed on for the guidance of confiding buyers, are to be ranked as peccadillos, or even perhaps as part of the amenities of business.

"When wrongs such as these have been committed or attempted, they must be dragged out into the light and pilloried."

The opinion was the only one handed down by the court. Justice Sutherland read the majority opinion, after which Justice Cardozo merely announced that he had a

11 Meat Firms Are Held Guilty Of Price-Fixing

Wallace's Order to Stop Practice Comes After 2 Years' Inquiry.

Cracking down sharply on 11 of the largest meat packing companies in the country, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace last night held that the companies were guilty of violating the packers and stockyards act in fixing prices, apportioning territory and related practices.

Secretary Wallace issued a "cease and desist" order demanding the companies halt such practices at once.

Companies affected were:

Armour & Co., Abraham Brothers Packing Co., Cudahy Packing Co., Jacob Dold Packing Co., John Morrell & Co., Memphis Packing Corporation, Swift & Co., Wilson & Co., North American Provision Co., George A. Hormel & Co., and the Birmingham Packing Co. In the original docket the St. Louis Independent Packing Co. also was included, but charges against this company were dropped.

The order came last night after more than two years of investigation and scores of hearings throughout the country. Investigators of the Department of Agriculture began studying the meat packing situation in regard to price fixing in November, 1933, after numerous complaints had been received at the department. In late February, 1934, Secretary Wallace issued the original complaint, charging the companies with acting in combination to control and manipulate prices.

Began in May, 1934.

In May of 1934 hearings began throughout the areas chiefly affected by the charges, in several Southern States, and witnesses were heard on both sides until sufficient information for procedure was accumulated.

The cease and desist order, signed by Secretary Wallace on March 31, will become effective on May 10.

The department release on the order stated:

"The proceedings, evidence and conclusion concern, principally, specified areas in several Southern States, but because of the interstate character of the packers' business and the element of prices charged for a basic food commodity, the case has attracted Nation-wide attention."

The packers will have 30 days, it is understood, to file an appeal from the ruling. Such appeals will likely be made to Circuit Courts of Appeals, asking that the ruling be modified or revoked.

Appeal Felt Likely.

Official sources last night indicated a strong belief that the packers would appeal. If such an ap-

Borah Denies He Is Hostile To Business

But Assails Monopoly; Says Farm Problem Is Still Serious.

Backers Ask Wisconsin Fund Inquiry; Ickes Praises New Deal.

By the Associated Press.

Milwaukee, April 6.—Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, bidding for votes as a candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination in Wisconsin's election tomorrow, assailed tonight what he termed "monopolistic power" controlling legitimate, independent busines.

"They say I am opposed to business," Senator Borah said in an appeal for convention delegate candidates pledged to support him. Anyone who would be opposed to business is an idiot."

"What I am opposed to," he continued, "is that monopolistic power that drives independent and legitimate business into bankruptcy. Whether I have a single vote at the Cleveland convention or not, I don't propose to surrender to forces of monopolistic business."

Borah discussed the farm problem which he said was as great and widespread as the Nation itself, and challenged the constitutionality of the law empowering the President to enter into such agreements as the Canadian reciprocal tariff act.

Farm Problem Services.

Asserting there had been some improvement in the farm situation, the Idahoan said the Nation nevertheless still had a serious agricultural problem.

"The American farmer is entitled to the full American market. Any attempt to buy from abroad will frustrate the American farmer with resulting failure of the entire farm program.

"A short time ago the United States entered the Canadian reciprocity agreement on farm products. While I believe in neighborliness toward Canada, the first duty of the Government is to the citizenship of the United States and its prosperity."

Wisconsin, the Senator asserted in an interview preceding his speech, "with good weather conditions," should return him "a favorable" vote. It should also be added, serve as a yardstick of his strength in the Middle West.

Ickes Praises New Deal.

Pittsburgh, April 6 (AP).—Secretary of the Interior Harold W. Ickes struck back tonight at critics of New Deal economic policies, including former President Herbert Hoover, and declared the Roosevelt Administration has engineered "tremendous" business gains.

The Public Works Administrator, addressing the community forum, assailed "Old Dealers" and the American Liberty League for what he described as their "cure-all nostrum" of "balance the budget" for economic recovery.

Ickes told the Community Forum that in the Pittsburgh district alone industrial production since 1932 has "improved 57 per cent" and Federal Reserve statistics showed a 56 per cent production increase in the United States.

The Interior Secretary denounced New Deal opponents he said "are going about the land arousing fears, instilling prejudices and making statements that cannot be supported by the facts."

Scornful of Hoover.

He mentioned former President Hoover, saying:

"Three years ago Mr. Hoover's refrain was that 'prosperity was just around the corner.'

"Now he is just as certain that 'collapse is just around the corner.'

"It is permissible to doubt the essential statesmanship of any man who, considering what the country has passed through, would deliberately seek to build up a state of corroding and possibly catastrophic fear to serve a political end."

By the Associated Press.

The Republican National Committee disclosed yesterday that on the complaint of supporters of Senator Borah it had acted to prevent use of Republican campaign funds against the Idaho Senator in the Wisconsin Presidential primary tomorrow.

Arthur M. Curtiss, aid to Chairman Henry P. Fletcher, said inquiry into the charges had been directed by the committee to Mrs. Henry E.

Gainesville, Ga., April 6.—A violent spring windstorm in three furious minutes today transformed the business section here into a blazing shambles, killing 145 persons to bring to 327 the dead in tornadoes lashing the South.

The blow fell here even as rescue workers, braving rains and sporadic fires, worked to remove bodies from the devastated west side residential section of Tupelo in northeastern Mississippi, where 133 were known dead.

Gainesville's known dead included ten whose bodies were burned beyond recognition in an outbreak of fire which followed the abrupt storm.

Fear Toll May Mount.

Rescue workers said they feared the death list would run still higher as wreckage was cleared away. Rescue workers at Tupelo said the toll there might reach 200, but only 133 deaths had been established definitely.

The heaviest loss of life here was reported at the Cooper Pants Manufacturing Co., a two-story brick structure. It collapsed under the force of the storm and began to burn.

In it were 125 workers. Many escaped, but estimates said that from 60 to 70 probably died there.

Today's storm toll ran above that of another disastrous tornado which struck here June 1, 1903. That storm killed 104.

Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas and South Carolina also felt tornadic winds, but their full fury centered here and at Tupelo.

Fires, adding to the horror of the scene here, hampered the work of rescue parties and relief authorities said it might be days before all the bodies were removed.

There were no official estimates of the property damage in the storms, but rescue workers said it might reach above $8,000,000. From 1,500 to 2,000 were reported injured in the stricken areas.

The dead in the tornadoes that followed a dotted and irregular path from Arkansas to South Carolina yesterday and today brought to nearly 400 the toll of storms in the South this year. Last week 43 were killed in blasts that centered at Cordele, Ga., and Greensboro, N. C. Seventeen died in a previous storm.

Torrential Rains.

Witnesses said the storm struck like a black horror with the roar of many locomotives. Torrential rains followed the winds.

A moment later the business district of this thriving textile manufacturing center was virtually a shambles.

There was not a building in the downtown district which was untouched and most of them, a few minutes before the scene of busy workers commencing their daily tasks, were reduced to piles of wreckage.

Treasury Aids Oppose Easing Corporate Levy

Appeals of Debt-Ridden Firms for Exemptions Go Unheeded.

By Robert C. Albright.

Tax relief for debt-ridden corporations, through special exemptions from Administration corporate tax proposals, yesterday encountered flat Treasury opposition in the face of strong Ways and Means Committee sentiment for making the change, and repeated appeals from debt-laden business for modification.

Hewing to the line of the President's tax recommendations, Treasury experts told the committee that special business exemptions would diminish revenues and interfere with uniform tax administration. Their testimony disclosed for the first time that individual shareholders actually may carry the burden of the new tax load, while corporations as a whole may pay less.

"Sharp Practice" Charge.

Charges that the Treasury had violated the criminal code and resorted to "sharp practices" in marshaling tax bill support rang out from the Republican side of the committee as the result of recent testimony by David Stock, who appeared at the Treasury's request.

Stock, who represented himself as a New York attorney, and indorsed the Administration's tax plan, was described yesterday by Representative Daniel A. Reed (Republican), New York, as "chief investigator for the Federal Communications Commission, located at 195 Broadway, New York City."

Citing Title 18, section 201, of the United States criminal code, making it unlawful for a Government official to make recommendations on revenue matters except at the request of Congress, Reed said:

"It is a disgraceful procedure that this Administration should foist upon the Ways and Means Committee a Government employe, posing as a disinterested private attorney, to

Freeman Proposed As Head of Church

Chicago, April 6 (AP).—Bishop George Craig Stewart, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, said today he would submit at the national council meeting in New York this month a proposal for reorganization of the work of the Protestant Episcopal Church nationally.

Under his proposal, Bishop Stewart said, a president of the national council would be provided separate from the presiding bishop. The president of the council would be elected by that body and would take over the administrative duties of the presiding bishop.

"The presiding bishop should be the spiritual head of the church," said the Chicago bishop. "He would be relieved of responsibility to his own diocese, elected for a life term and should have his headquarters in Washington, where he would have a cathedral."

He said he would advocate the election of the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, present Bishop of Washington, as head of the church under the reorganized basis.

Bishop Stewart is chairman of a special committee designated to offer a reorganization plan to the national council of his church.

Army Parades to Mark Entry Of U. S. Into War 19 Years Ago

Crowd Thrilled as Soldiers March on Constitution Avenue; Others Go to Statuary Hall to Pay Tribute to Memory of La Follette.

Symbolizing the Nation's might on land and sea and in the air, bands and marching men, clattering hoofs and rumbling caissons yesterday shook the Capital to their tread in the annual Army Day parade, commemorating the nineteenth anniversary of the entrance of the United States into the World War.

Even as steel-helmeted soldiers, sailors and Marines in service uniforms swung solemnly across Capitol plaza and down Constitution avenue, Senate and House conferees were busy completing legislative action on the greatest peace-time Army appropriation bill in history.

While trumpets shrilled and drums rattled those martial tunes that have sent Americans to seven major wars, hundreds of undergraduates were meeting at George Washington University, speaking and attending the Student Conference on Peace.

And, before the stirring notes of a bugle set the parade in motion at 1:45 p. m. yesterday, a delegation of Congressmen and citizens had gathered at the statue of the late Senator Robert M. La Follette, sr., of Wisconsin, in Statuary Hall, and paid tribute to the 6 Senators and 50 Representatives who voted, 19 years ago, to keep the United States out of war.

Services in Statuary Hall were held under the auspices of the National Council for the Prevention of War. Among the speakers were Representatives Harold Knutson and Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota.

In night features of the occasion, Secretary of War Dern told a Chicago audience that America's Army is "dangerously small."

"As a Nation," he said, "we have had half a dozen major wars, and were not prepared for any of them. Had we been better prepared we might not have been forced to fight and we would have attained victory in much shorter time."

Speaker Joseph W. Byrns, who spoke at Alexandria, urged a defensive Navy second to none. Commenting on the recent vote on the War Department bill for more liberal contributions, he said "the House acted wisely when it took cognizance of disturbed conditions throughout the world."

The soldiers, sailors, Marines and

Trial of Reich For Rhine Step Voted in France

League Army Proposed to Enforce Decisions; Flandin Supported.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, April 6.—France carried her fight to punish Adolf Hitler for remilitarizing the Rhineland a step further tonight when the cabinet voted to try to arraign Germany before the bar of the League of Nations.

The cabinet unanimously approved Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin's triple plan of action to solve the crisis:

1. Ask the Locarno powers to seek action against Germany under the Covenant of the League, which already has found the Reich guilty of treaty violation.
2. Refuse to allow Germany to fortify the Rhineland.
3. Flatly reject Hitler's peace plan and smother it with a substitute based on colletcive security. (Hitler proposed a series of bilateral pacts.)

The French peace plan calls for a sort of "European League of Nations" within the world League of Nations.

All European nations would be invited to sign a single pact calling for instant military assistance against any nation which "crosses another's frontier."

An international motorized force, composed of contingents from each country in the pact, would be put under the control of the League of Nations to act as "shock troops" against the aggressor.

Definition Sought.

The French government also advocates the insertion in article 16 of the League of Nations Covenant of a definition of an aggressor as a nation "crossing another nation's frontier."

The plan also involves a proposal for "putting teeth" into the Covenant by adding the League's famous declaration of April 17, 1935—after Germany announced its re-armament—which prescribed sanctions for "uni-lateral treaty breakers" and not necessarily those going to war.

France at the same time will try

Rescue Worker Finds Kins' Names on Toll

By the Associated Press.

Miss Elizabeth Ellis, of National Red Cross Headquarters here, toiled throughout the day over lists of dead and injured in the Gainesville (Ga.) tornado. Early last night a list of new names put down on her desk contained the names of her brothers, Clarence O. Ellis, and his wife.

7 Kin of D. C. Man Reported Dead in Storm

R. D. Grigg, Jr., Stoical at News, Hurries South to Confirm Tragedy.

Robert D. Grigg, jr., of 3121 South Dakota avenue, left Washington last night for Gainesville, Ga., to confirm the report that seven members of his family, including his father and younger brother, had died in the tornado that raged over the six Southern States Sunday and early yesterday.

Grigg's father, brother, brother's wife and four of their seven children were listed by the Associated Press as victims of the gale. First news of their reported deaths was given Grigg when he called newspaper offices for information.

Grigg took the news calmly and tried to reach Gainesville by telephone and by sending telegrams to several relatives in the vicinity. When no replies to his wires were received, and he was informed all phone lines were out of commission, Grigg determined to go to Gainesville to learn the truth for himself.

His father, Dr. Robert Grigg, he said, was 71 years old and had been in the wholesale drug business in Gainesville for 50 years. The Associated Press report gave the time of his father's death at 8 o'clock yesterday morning.

"Father must have been at work then," said Grigg. "He always got down to his place before then."

The Associated Press listed the other dead in the family as Mr. and Mrs. Pete Grigg and their children, Charles, John, Nora Ann and Malon Grigg. "Pete," Grigg explained, was the nickname of his brother, Frederick LePage Grigg, 39.

An agent for the Life Insurance Co. of Virginia, Grigg has been a resident of Washington for 17 years. He has three children, Ida Josephine, 9; Robert D. 3d, 7, and William, going on 2.

Two other immediate members of the family live outside the Gainesville area. Grigg's sister, Mrs. Emily J. Urbina, resides in Boston, while an aunt, Mrs. Sidney M. Falconer, lives at 12 Randolph place. Because she had been in ill health for some time, Mrs. Falconer was not notified immediately of the tragedy.

Hot Rivet Starts $10,000 Fire, Imperils 16 Bridge Workers

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, April 6.—A 30-cent red-hot rivet caused $10,000 damage and endangered 16 workers on the huge Bay Bridge today by igniting a wooden pier fender, soaked with creosote.

The fenders, virtually the only inflammable parts of the huge structure, are placed around the piers to protect them from collision by water craft.

The fire, which called out all available fireboats and sent dense smoke billowing hundreds of feet into the air, occurred just east of midbay Yerba Buena Island on a pier supporting the western end of a 1,400-foot cantilever span.

A workman on the bridge deck, 185 feet above the water, dropped the rivet. It landed directly on the wooden fender which extends about 10 feet above and below the water line.

In a few minutes flames encircled the entire pier, driving 16 workmen, who tried to extinguish them, into an Army launch, which sped to the scene. Heat scorched their clothing.

Two city fireboats and one from the island Navy depot finally doused the flames—but not before they had wrecked the fender, blistered paint more than 1,100 feet up in the steel bridge tower, and spread soot to the top, 250 feet above the water.

Charles H. Purcell, chief engineer of the 8¼-mile, $77,000,000 bridge, said no part of the actual structure had been damaged.

It will be necessary to repaint the bridge pillar and reconstruct the fender.

The fenders are not actually portions of the bridge, but are placed there by Government request. The huge bridge is expected to be ready for automobile traffic next fall.

Princess, 2,000 Years Older Than King Tut, Found in Egypt

By the United Press.

Cairo, April 6.—The remains of an Egyptian princess, who flitted about the royal courts of Egypt 2,000 years before King Tut Ankh-Amen was born, have been discovered in the Gizeh pyramids, Prof. Selim Hassan announced today.

Hassan said water from the River Nile had seeped into the ancient tomb, covered the body of the princess with a thick coating of mud and preserved it through the centuries better than any known man-made chemical preparation.

The princess was said to have died about 5,500 years ago and was believed to have been the daughter of Pharaoh Chephren, who constructed Egypt's second greatest pyramid.

Chephren was the brother of Cheops, builder of the great pyramid, and succeeded him as ruler of Egypt. Cheops sold his daughter's honor to obtain money to build the great pyramid which was to be his tomb. There is no record that Chephren also obtained money for his tomb that way.

The head and teeth of the princess were in a perfect state of preservation. The rest of her body was skeleton. Hassan believes the tomb is 7,000 years old, because it is situated in the fourth dynasty of Necropolis between the tombs of other children of King Hefren. However, there were no hieroglyphics to corroborate this.

The tomb was of limestone and covered with mud, which, Prof. Hassan said, undoubtedly destroyed the wrappings placed around the princess' body when it was mummified. The tomb apparently was buried in deep sand shortly after the princess' burial.

Beneath the mud coating, the remains were covered with gold ornaments. Three threads of richest gold hung around the princess' neck. Another gold necklace and two solid gold weights, believed to have fallen from the body, were on the floor of the tomb.

Archeologists considered the discovery the most important since the finding of King Tut's mummy.

President Gets Report on Aid In Storm Area

Checks Over Efforts as He Prepares to Conclude Trip Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., April 6.—President Roosevelt closely checked over Federal relief efforts in the Southeastern tornado area from the U. S. S. Potomac today as he arranged to conclude his fishing cruise.

He will return ashore Wednesday afternoon probably at this port, and board his train immediately for Washington by way of Warm Springs, Ga.

Keeps in Touch by Radio.

From his anchorage at Stirrup Cay today, the President kept fully informed of the tornado destruction in the Southeast States, communicating by wireless with George Dern, the Secretary of War and chairman of the Government Special Emergency Commission.

Roosevelt was informed that relief directors have been sent into the stricken areas to reinforce Red Cross workers and the Works Progress Administration has instructed State administrators in Georgia, North Carolina and Mississippi to co-operate.

The War Department has instructed the commanding general of the Fourth Corps Area to make a personal investigation and extend whatever assistance is needed.

It is the plan of the President to spend Thursday at his Warm Springs, Ga., home which, incidentally, is not far from the tornado zone.

Due Here Friday.

He expects to reach Washington about noon on Friday.

"Potomac and Monahan continuing at Stirrup Cay," said the President in a message today to Marvin H. McIntyre, a secretary here.

"Mackerel and mutton fish have been caught and we are planning swimming and fishing parties for this afternoon.

Roosevelt today signed the commission of Thomas Parran as the new Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service.

Calls were made today at the temporary White House headquarters here by Gov. McNutt of Indiana, J. J. Pelley, the head of the Railway Executives Association, and George Allen, Commissioner of Washington.

Stephen T. Early, a secretary of Roosevelt, also joined McIntyre at the headquarters here.

Packers

peal is granted by the lower court, it is understood, the department will immediately seek a Supreme Court decision in the matter.

The packers were charged with furnishing to each other information on prices at which they would sell meats and meat food products. This, it was said, was to give unreasonable preferences and advantages to purchasers and localities, to discriminate between certain persons, to force competitors out of business and to manipulate prices and apportion sales in commerce.

States affected were principally Arkansas, Texas, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee. About 900 witnesses and more than 24,000 pages of testimony were taken before department examiners in the hearings in an effort to disclose alleged illegal practices.

In a 176-page order and report, the Secretary summarized the findings of the hearings, including such specific details as names and places and dates in such alleged cases where employes of packing companies lunched together while agreeing on price lists, closed territories, the manner of conducting price wars, employment of a "policeman" to enforce arrangements and keep the trade "in line."

Government exhibits in the hearings also were said to include price lists marked to indicate how prices would be cut or lowered to chain stores, price lists exchanged by packers, telegrams complaining of prices out of line with arranged lists, and reported admonitions to keep lists secret as being "against the law."

Government witnesses and counsel also introduced an exhibit of 30,000 invoices to support charges of price fixing, and described such incidents as that in one area, where the business was said to have been rotated, with each of four packers getting the business one week every month. Testimony was received from 200 retailers.

The docket, referring to the recognized difficulty of proving conspiracy and illegal agreements, quotes from a Supreme Court decision that says conspiracy "is seldom capable of proof by direct testimony and may be inferred from things actually done."

The Secretary's legal powers end with the issuance of the cease-and-desist order under the packers' and stockyards' act.

The report closes with the paragraph:

"The Secretary emphasizes that the order is not to be interpreted as prohibiting differences in prices to persons and to localities based upon differences in cost of distribution or other differences warranted in the exercise of sound honest business judgment."

Kansans Hope For Rain and Big Crops, Unlamenting the AAA.

By Franklyn Waltman

TOPEKA, Kans., April 6.—With 14,300,000 acres—an all-time record—already planted to wheat, Kansans have been praying for wet weather, rain or snow. And in a slight measure their prayers are being answered, for twice within the last week light blankets of snow have covered parts of the State. That is one reason why Kansans are whistling now.

WALTMAN

Prospects for a bumper wheat crop, despite the record acreage planted last fall, remain uncertain, however. It has, on the whole, been a dry winter and the ground lacks the 2 feet of moisture Kansans explain is necessary for a good yield. But hopes remain high that the snow and rain of the last week will help.

Agriculture is the chief industry of Kansas and wheat is the big cash crop. In 1931, for instance, Kansas produced 240,000,000 bushels of wheat, one-fourth of the Nation's crop. It had a value estimated at $81,416,000. But prices were very low that year. In 1934 Kansas' production was but 80,000,000 bushels—one-third of the 1931 figure. The value of that wheat crop was estimated at $67,205,000, or about 83 per cent of the 1931 value.

Despite the fact that Kansas received almost as much in 1934 for a wheat crop two-thirds less in volume as it did in 1931, the farmers here have not been convinced of the wisdom of an economy of scarcity. The theory is repugnant to something bred deeply into their bones—a feeling given expression when Kansans sowed a record wheat acreage last fall. Incidentally, that is concrete evidence that AAA and acreage reduction were breaking down before the invalidating Supreme Court decision.

This, however, is not to say that Kansas farmers, as a group, were aggressively hostile to the AAA. They enjoyed the $86,000,000 that agency poured into the State in benefit and rental payments. They appreciate that this money, along with Federal relief funds, helped pull the drought-stricken areas over some bad spots.

As a result of the Federal aid, but chiefly because of higher farm prices generally, many Kansas Republicans this year will vote for President Roosevelt in November, unless Gov. Alf M. Landon is the Republican nominee—and then some will vote for Mr. Roosevelt anyway, it is reported here by observers who have toured the State.

Although the $40,000,000 which the AAA disbursed in Kansas last year will be missed, few farmers felt any inclination to stage protest demonstrations over the Supreme Court decision. It is doubtful whether the State will receive so much under the soil conservation program.

Indeed, none around the State Capitol, including writers for farm journals, seem to know what the new farm program would mean to Kansas. Most said they were unable to figure it out until AAA agents from Washington arrive. The State's dirt farmers know even less about the program—so, it is said, it is not known whether Kansas will like the new plan.

Republican leaders think the change in the farm program may make a difference in Kansas sentiment—but if so, it is not yet apparent. Memories are short, they contend, and the farmers will soon forget about the benefits they received and will go back to their traditional political anchorage, which is the Republican Party.

As the State capital, Topeka always has been one of the main stops on the railroads passing through the town. Until a year ago, however, the de luxe flyers out of Chicago and Kansas City for Oklahoma, Texas and the West Coast frequently passed it by. But no more. Hardly a day passes that half-dozen or more out-of-State passengers climb down from these trains. They are political leaders, businessmen and journalists. They want to see Alf M. Landon—some to scramble aboard the Landon bandwagon. Indeed, so great has the rush for the bandwagon become that it is embarrassing the Governor. Everyone cannot sit on the front seat.

Kansas' Governor has refused to go East—or West or South, for that matter—and has insisted on attending to his job in the Statehouse. So the East and the West and the South have come to see him, giving as practical a demonstration as we have had in recent years of the office seeking the man. Of more than 100 writers who have come to Topeka to talk with Gov. Landon, not one has been invited. They sought the meeting.

The door of the Governor's office stands wide open. As you sit in the large, shabbily furnished reception room presided over by the Governor's secretary, Willard Mayberry, a former cowboy, you can see the Governor chatting with his callers. The afternoon is reserved for appointments and desk work, but in the morning anyone may see him.

Gov. Landon takes his callers as they come, political potentates and big-shot magazine writers trooping in after humble Kansas farmers. The latter seemed to be greeted as warmly as the former. One reason, perhaps, why so many people like Gov. Landon is that he likes people—appears genuinely interested in you, your views and what you are doing. Sometimes the interviewer suddenly realizes he is being interviewed.

All Topeka appears to be fond of Gov. Landon. The newspaper corps covering the Statehouse express affection for him, although they all say "he is poor copy." Occasionally, they explained, he irritates them because he does not make the most of his opportunities for publicity. This group likes him, nevertheless, because, they say, he is honest, sincere, straight-forward and modest. Few men are heroes in their home towns; around any State capital there are a few who scoff at the Governor's ability—but I have not heard one sour note in Topeka.

And Kansans generally believe that Gov. Landon will be the Republican nominee. At first they were skeptical of the Landon-for-President movement. Later they were amazed at the progress made by the Governor's candidacy. Now they just take it for granted that he will be nominated. As you leave Topeka, your friends call after you: "See you when you come back for the notification day ceremonies."

Grayson Issues Red Cross Plea For Storm Aid

Tornadoes Add Thousands to 500,000 Flood Victims Requiring Relief.

An appeal for Southern tornado relief funds was made last night by Admiral Cary T. Grayson, American Red Cross chairman, as the death list grew.

He urged new contributions to the general relief fund which has soared to a higher figure almost daily since the recent disastrous floods in the East.

The general flood-tornado purse—all voluntary donations—last night stood at $5,222,000.

Grayson emphasized the new emergency has created a great demand for beds, clothes, food and medicine for the thousands of persons driven from their homes in six Southern States.

Spurs Chapter Drives.

He urged all Red Cross chapters to participate in the renewed drive to assure adequate and speedy relief for the storm victims.

On his return from a survey of the flooded area he said:

"The number of people in the flooded States alone who will require Red Cross relief will run over 500,000 and it is apparent we will need a much greater fund than the $3,000,000 originally asked for."

Red Cross workers already have been deployed throughout the tornado-haunted South.

"There is no place," Grayson explained, "however small the damage, that the Red Cross has not reached, including the communities hit in the past 24 hours by the tornadoes."

As soon as word of the storm was flashed to the Washington Red Cross headquarters, relief machinery swung into action. National staff workers were distributed over the storm swept States from Washington, St. Louis and other cities.

Depart for South.

From Memphis, for example, Clinton Schley, disaster relief chairman in that section, set forth immediately for Tupelo, Miss., with a fleet of ambulances, 16 doctors and 32 nurses.

Dr. William DeKleine, Red Cross national medical director, already was in Cordele, Ga., the town laid waste by another tornado last week. He went to Tupelo with Miss Margaret Dizney, of Washington, Red Cross Public Health Nursing Service assistant director, who also was in Cordele.

William S. Hepner led the Washington group which departed for the South.

An inkling of the way the country is expected to meet the tornado fund request was given when the Dowagiac, Mich., chapter telegraphed national headquarters it would match its flood contribution by sending a check for storm relief.

Tax Bill

give his advice on the pending tax bill. To put it mildly, they have resorted to rather sharp practices to trump up support for the Administration tax measure."

Arthur Kent, general counsel for the Internal Revenue Bureau, said he had invited Stock to testify, but indicated he was not familiar with the code provision cited by Reed. At the Communications Commission it was said Stock was an investigator, but not chief investigator.

Testifying at the request of Representative Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts, ranking minority member, both Kent and Herman Oliphant, general counsel of the Treasury, spoke in defense of the President's proposed tax changes, termed by Oliphant "the most important tax reform since the income tax law."

Bell to Testify Today.

In the audience sat Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, and Daniel W. Bell, acting director of the budget. Bell will testify as the hearings drive toward conclusion today. For the first time during the hearings, the United States Chamber of Commerce may send witnesses before the committee.

As Oliphant and Kent reiterated Administration arguments for the bill, Democrats grinned broadly, or twitted Treadway for requesting them to appear. A resolution of "gratitude" to Treadway was offered by Representative Fred M. Vinson, of Kentucky, but the Massachusetts Republican demurred, declared it "not germane."

Earlier the committee was charged with "strong-arm" methods by members of the House dairy bloc, denied a hearing before the group, while hearings were attacked in a people's lobby statement as "Fascist Futility."

Representative Harry Sauthoff, Wisconsin Progressive, had asked for a 5-cent tax on olemargerine and a 7½ cent duty on foreign fats and oils, but the committee, by a party vote of 18 to 7, had shut him off on the ground that hearings were limited to the subject matter of the sub-committee's report. Vainly Sauthoff contended that 125 members of the House dairy bloc would be denied a hearing should the Senate write processing taxes into the bill. Vinson countered that they could present their views if necessary at the House and Senate conference on the measure.

Committee Tactics Scored.

Representative August H. Andersen (Republican), Minnesota, issued a statement saying the dairy members had intended to testify against any renewal of processing taxes, or any substitute excise taxes, against the dairy industry. "At least they should have been heard for record purposes, Andersen said.

"Such legislative procedure is not only irregular but unwholesome," he added. "It is a direct violation of the fundamental principles of republican government. When members of Congress are denied the right to be heard in the interests of their own districts, a new order of government has arrived."

The People's Lobby said the Senate was "the only forum left the common people for justice in taxation."

First estimates of how the new corporate earnings tax would be distributed between corporations and shareholders' dividends were offered by Aubrey S. McLeod, Treasury research assistant.

See $591,000,000 New Revenue.

Assuming that 70 per cent of earnings are distributed to stockholders (average corporate rententions for reserves has been about 30 per cent), McLeod said taxes on shareholders' dividends would yield an additional $658,000,000, while corporations themselves on average would pay $67,000,000 less. McLeod estimated the individual dividend tax will yield $1,811,000,000, as against $1,153,000,000; while the corporations would pay $1,065,000,000, compared with $1,132,000,000. It is on the basis of these estimates the committee has predicted the new tax will yield a net of $591,000,000 additional revenue.

Both Oliphant and Kent opposed favored treatment in the tax bill for corporations which have large debts to meet, claiming that to so provide would give corporations an advantage not shared by partnerships and individual businesses.

"I can't justify talk about providing special rates for corporations unless the same provisions be given 1,500,000 individuals and partnerships in business," said Oliphant.

"Every exception and each new form of special treatment of particular types of corporate situations will tend to complicate the Administration of the new corporate tax, if enacted into law, and will impair the uniformity and equality of its application, as well as endanger to some extent the estimates of revenue to be obtained, or necessitate higher rates upon those not favored," Kent said. "Reflection will show that the problem of the debt-ridden corporation is not fundamentally different from that of the debt-ridden business enterprise carried on in individual or partnership form."

Both Oliphant and Kent contended big taxpayers will be unable, on a "substantial" scale, to avoid taxation by purchasing tax-exempt securities, Kent taking the position that such Federal issues are not large, and "States and their subdivisions have entered a declining phase of their debt cycles." On cross-examination by Republican members, however, Kent admitted that State and local tax-exempt securities have recently been at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a year, and, due to PWA obligations, it may be some years before the volume of these security issues decline materially.

The Treasury spokesmen refused to concede that corporations would be denied the right to accumulate reserves for a "rainy day" as a result of the dividend-forcing corporations tax, or that the Administration would presume to dictate corporate reserve policies. If corporations needed to retain more than 30 or 40 per cent of earnings, Kent said, it might be done by the use of "taxable stock dividends or the issue of interest-bearing dividend script to shareholders."

Oliphant argued that large corporate surpluses were not necessarily a prosperity guarantee. Repeatedly he told the committee that "the greatest depression in the history of the country followed accumulation of the greatest corporation surpluses in history."

It was Oliphant's contention that the proposed tax would place "the least hardship on the people as a whole, business and nonbusiness, knowing there are only four sources of revenue—business profits, wages and earnings, taxes on rents and taxes on interest."

He said that he personally thought there were only two other alternatives—drastic increases in the corporation income tax, which he said would accentuate tax inequalities, or steep excess profits taxes, which Oliphant thought "had a good deal to be said for them." The Treasury counsel said the corporation tax would place the burden "on the area of abundance rather than on the area of relative dearth."

Refused Jobs, 350 Men Begin Digging in Streets

Avila, Spain, April 6 (AP).—Dissatisfied over a lack of jobs, 350 unemployed men seized shovels and pickaxes today and began to dig up the main streets of this city.

The men earlier had appeared at the city hall and demanded work. Authorities said only 20 jobs were available.

Civil guards finally dispersed the workers, but only after considerable damage had been done to the main street.

Rain at Tupelo Quells Flames, Aids Rescuers

Work Is Slow and Tedious; Guardsmen on Duty to Avoid Looting.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Tupelo, Miss., April 6.—Rescue workers laid out the bodies of 124 tornado victims tonight, and said they expected the death toll to go close to 200 when they had dug their way through all the wreckage.

National Guardsmen patrolled the ravaged areas. Damage was estimated at $4,000,000. Nature, which viciously battered Tupelo, became more kindly tonight and sent rain. It blotted out many fires that had started and had added another menace to life and property.

Destruction was thorough and appalling. The twister roared down on one house here and splintered it. Inside were Mr. and Mrs. Jim Burroughs and their 11 children. All were killed.

The Lee County courthouse was a melancholy building. Women and children lay on tables and on the floor—some of them covered with nothing but old pieces of quilt. This building was the chief "hospital."

The dormitory of the Tupelo Military Institute and the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches also were turned into hospitals and a ragged, battered line of tornado victims filed into them for treatment.

Special Plane on Way.

The Red Cross appealed to Washington for help, and it was understood a special plane was on the way with reinforcements for rescue workers.

One hundred and seventy workers on the Tennessee Valley authority's Pickwick dam dropped their tools and joined in the rescue work. Two hundred CCC members helped.

Two-thirds of the town was demolished and rescue work was slow and tedious. Men had to fight their way through masses of tangled beams and boards. Fairly good order was maintained because National Guardsmen were instructed to shoot anybody caught looting.

Six persons were dead in Columbia, Tenn. Red Bay, Ala., and Booneville, Miss., had four dead each. La Crosse, Ark., and Melbourne, Ark., reported one fatality each.

Tupelo is a business center, serving a prosperous farming region. It was among the first towns to contract for power from the Tennessee Valley experiment.

Train From Memphis.

A special train from Memphis brought hospital equipment, medical and food supplies, and doctors and nurses.

The section of Tupelo that suffered most was around the municipal water tower and reservoir—chiefly inhabitated by Negroes. The water tank was blown down, and survivors said 20 persons were hurtled into the reservoir. Several of those bodies were recovered and workers continued to drag for more.

The persons who escaped injury gathered in excited little knots and talked about the awesome things they had seen. Several reported bodies went shooting through the air. Roofs were lifted off and flung a quarter of a mile. Trees came out by the roots and streaked through the air like giant arrows.

Unwarned, Unprepared.

Tupelo was unwarned and unprepared. The tornado took less than ten minutes to cut its way across two-thirds of the town. It raced on west, smote a CCC camp and then seemed to lose some of its force.

The electric lighting system was snuffed out immediately. Telephone and electric poles bent, broke and crashed. Only one telephone line was left intact, and 20 minutes after the tornado struck, city officials commandeered it to summon aid from Jackson and other nearby towns.

An hour later trucks and passenger cars slid along the wet gravel roads bringing help.

A check-up showed that the twister first struck a residential section called Willis Heights and then cut on across the town, ravaging a path 200 yards wide.

Seven Relatives Perish in Storm

Tornadoes Lash South

jured, coupled with the fires, gave an eerie aspect to the scene.

Fire engines and ambulances were trapped in their efforts to get through the streets by the litter of debris.

Water mains were burst, adding to the difficulties of fire fighters. Food and clothing stores were demolished and a shortage of supplies loomed as an added hardship as relief agencies hurried help here.

Six States suffered from the storms. Fifty were injured in Anderson, S. C., but early reports of one dead there were later disproved.

Undertaking establishments here were overtaxed and crowded with grief-stricken relatives of the dead.

While the most of those dead were whites, many of the victims of the tornadoes both here and to the South were Negroes.

National guardsmen were hurried both to Gainesville and Tupelo to aid in the rescue work and prevent looting. Relief workers were expedited to the stricken areas from surrounding communities, and from Washington.

The storms struck first in Arkansas, twisted eastward into Mississippi and Alabama, and then lashed at Tennessee and skipped into Georgia and South Carolina.

Cutting an irregular pattern of wreckage, the tornadoes leveled and damaged structures along a dotted path ranging from 100 feet or so to more than 400 yards wide in the affected areas.

Train From Memphis.

At Tupelo, where relief workers estimated more than 1,000 were injured, a relief train from Memphis brought a corps of physicians, nurses and needed medical supplies. Injured were distributed among nearby cities as quickly as they could be moved.

A series of fires cropped out shortly after the tornado struck last night, but torrential downpours aided firemen in extinguishing the blaze. Hundreds were homeless there.

The storm lashed Gainesville just after employes had reported for work in the city's various business establishments.

A section of the city approximately 2½ miles long and nearly a mile wide was struck by the twister. Fourteen blocks of business houses were destroyed.

Fires broke out shortly after the storm passed. Broken water mains, snapped in the wreckage of the buildings, made it difficult for firemen to get pressure to combat the flames.

Hotel Guests Escape.

The Dixie Hunt Hotel, the city's largest hotel, was wrecked, but an official said the guests escaped without injury. Ruins trapped fire trucks as they sought to reach a fire which raged in that block.

Rain which fell throughout the morning added to the discomfort of the storm sufferers. Rescue workers estimated that at least 2,000 were homeless here.

Soup kitchens were established throughout the wrecked area with CCC workers and volunteers manning them. The serious aspects of the situation were accentuated by the fact that most of the city's food and supply stores were demolished.

Undertaking establishments were filled with streams of anxious persons seeking to identify missing members of their family. Bodies were laid on the floor or in rude wooden coffins in these places and improvised morgues set up in buildings undamaged by the storm.

Streets through the business district and main residential sections were piled high with debris, making traffic impossible. Thousands of curious persons from throughout the region thronged the city.

Students Patrol Area.

Uniformed students from Riverside Academy patrolled the area until relieved by three companies of National Guardsmen, headed by Adjt. Gen. Lindley Camp.

Gangs of convicts were hurried here to help clear up the debris. Police from nearby cities were brought in to aid in keeping order. Undamaged residences were at once commandeered to house the injured.

Two trainloads of the injured were sent to Atlanta for hospitalization.

Those in charge of the rescue work here said it might be days before some of the dead were identified. The bodies of many were mutilated in the wreckage and seared by flames which followed the storm.

Fire companies from Atlanta, Buford, Athens and a score of nearby communities were sent here to help control the situation.

Troops Called To Aid Rescue At Gainesville

City Hall and Courthouse Demolished; Engineer Describes Twister.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Gainesville, Ga., April 6.—A twisting black cloud blotted out the sun just as this little Southern city began its activity today and in a few brief moments the heart of Gainesville was piled with twisted debris and mangled dead.

Rain, pouring down in blinding sheets, followed the tornado. Day was turned into night, but not for long. Fire broke out in a half-dozen buildings, and the stricken city was lighted by leaping flames.

More than 75 were known dead. Many more were believed killed. Hundreds were injured.

"You can't tell how many are dead," Police Chief D. J. Hopkins said. "We have just begun to dig into the wreckage. Some estimates run as high as 500, but I hope that figure is too high."

The flames added to the destruction wrought by the tornado. The city's fire-fighting equipment was buried when the city hall was destroyed. Water mains were broken. Pumping facilities were knocked out of commission.

Fire departments of Atlanta and nearby towns rushed equipment and men to check the fires, by use of dynamite if necessary.

Troops Sent to Scene.

Gov. Eugene Talmadge sent two companies of National Guardsmen to protect property and to aid in recovery of bodies and rescue and treatment of those hurt. Corps of doctors and nurses were organized by the Red Cross.

The twister struck the center of the city at 8:45 a. m. The business section is grouped around the courthouse and a central square. The courthouse was demolished.

First reports said two-thirds of the business section was leveled or badly damaged. Then the tornado skipped through a residential section and struck industrial plants on the edge of the city.

Among these was the new Holland mill, employing 200 women. It was unroofed and caught fire. The women were reported in danger.

A schoolhouse was destroyed 15 minutes before classes were to begin. Most of the children were believed playing in the yard.

Brenau College for Girls and the Riverside Military Academy escaped damage.

Property damage was estimated at $5,000,000, but with all communications except one telephone line down, this was as much guess work as the estimates of the dead.

Three major fires still raged this afternoon. They were in the Piedmont Drug Co. block, in which is the Citizens Bank of Gainesville; the Dixie Hotel block and the Pruitt-Barrett Hardware Co. block.

These were in addition to the fires reported at the damaged industrial plants outside the city proper.

Temporary refuges were arranged for the homeless in public buildings and business houses which still had roofs. The Red Cross and townspeople prepared to feed rescue workers and those whose homes were destroyed.

Lawyer Admits He Paid Ritter On Getting Fee

Defense Says Money Was 'Honest' Debt, Accusers Call It 'Corrupt.'

By the Associated Press.

A. L. Rankin, West Palm Beache attorney, testified at the Senate impeachment trial of Federal Judge Halsted L. Ritter, of Florida, yesterday he paid the jurist $2,500 the same day he received an advance of $25,000 on a $75,000 receivership fee allowed him by Ritter.

Rankin, a middle-aged man, dressed in an immaculate gray-striped suit, was Ritter's former law partner.

The House prosecution charges the $2,500 was part of $4,500 Ritter "corruptly and unlawfully" received from Rankin after going on the bench in February, 1929.

Paid Others by Check.

The defense claims the money was in discharge of an honest debt owed the judge for his interest when their law parnership dissolved after the 65-year-old jurist received his appointment from President Coolidge.

The story of the $2,500 payment was developed by Representative Hobbs (Democrat), of Alabama, blue-suited member of the three-man House prosecution staff.

Rankin testified he wrote checks to pay other attorneys out of the $25,000 fee for services in the West Palm Beach Whitehall Hotel receivership, but that his payment to Judge Ritter was in cash because he "did not want to subject Judge Ritter, or myself, to criticism."

"Everybody but Ritter got his in check?" asked Hobbs.

"Correct," Rankin replied.

Feared Criticism.

"Was there anyone else in his office when the payment was made?"

"There was no one else in his private office."

"You didn't take a receipt?"

"No, there wasn't a scratch of a pen."

"It's a fact then that you got $25,000 under a decree signed by Ritter and after writing a couple of checks, took another for $3,000, cashed it, and gave Ritter $2,500?"

"That's exactly right."

Asked by Senator Robinson (Democrat), Arkansas, why he paid Ritter in cash, Rankin said:

"I started to write out a check and then it occurred to me Judge Ritter might not be doing business there (at the bank Rankin patronized) and then it might subject him and me to criticism to pay him on the same day the receivership fee was paid."

The same consideration, he said, governed his later payment of $2,000 to Ritter.

Questions by Senator Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, as to the time of day he received the order for the $25,000 receivership fee, brought a reply that it was "just around noon—or just before noon."

Got Receipt in Full.

"What time was it that you on December 24, 1934, paid Judge Ritter?" Walsh asked in a second question.

"To the best of my recollection, a little before noon," Rankin replied.

There was an audible stir in the Senate.

Senator Barkley (Democrat) Kentucky, asked in another penciled question (oral questions are forbidden) why Rankin had made the second payment to Ritter in cash, and the witness replied "for the same reason" that he had paid the first—"I did not want to subject Judge Ritter or myself to criticism."

"I owed him an honest debt. I paid him and received a receipt in full," said Rankin.

Frank P. Walsh, defense attorney, in his opening statement, had asserted Ritter gave a receipt for payment in full when the last $300 installment on a $5,000 debt had been paid.

Previously Rankin had testified he permitted a mortgage foreclosure suit against the Whitehall Hotel to stand against the wishes of a client.

He also said, in reply to questions by Hobbs, that he filed intervening petitions in the suit for other clients at the time he was supposed to be representing Bert E. Holland, of Boston, who controlled $50,000 of first mortgage bonds on the property.

Army Parade Thrills Crowds

veterans who marched in the parade yesterday beneath threatening skies numbered, despite the fact that almost 150 organizations were represented, but 3,662 by official count.

In the second division, of which Col. John W. Oehmann, commander of the District National Guard, was marshal, were the 121st Engineers and their band, special troops and military police of the Twenty-ninth Division, a company from the 372d Infantry, the 260th Coast Artillery with its drum and bugle corps and new wheeled equipment, including the high powered searchlight section fresh from duty during last month's flood.

Following them tramped the high school cadets, in their neat blue, pink-cheeked school boys, most of whom had not been born on that fateful day 19 years ago when the Nation plunged itself into the World War. These units were followed by a contingent of infantry, artillery and cavalry from the C. M. T. C.

The fourth and final division was composed of veterans and patriotic organizations. There came the massed colors of all the veterans organizations, under Col. Walter C. Clephane, of the Military Order of the World War.

Smaller Bonus To Farms Urged By Vandenberg

Senator Proposes Scaling Down AAA Benefits to Large Producers.

Following revelation by Secretary Wallace that individual payments of farm benefits have run as high as $1,000,000, Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, yesterday suggested a scaling down of payments to large producers.

Vandenberg's suggestion was that benefit payments be "the reverse of the income tax schedule," becoming smaller per unit as the total production of an individual farmer or farming corporation increases. The payments revealed by Wallace were made under the unconstitutional AAA act. Future payments will be made on the basis of land taken out of production.

The Senate Agriculture Committee finally approved the Vandenberg resolution asking for a list of all payments of $10,000 or more. The committee had previously agreed to ask for all payments of $1,000 or more, but later increased the amount to $10,000, as provided in the original draft. The resolution also calls for the amount of money paid producers in each State.

The resolution will be reported as soon as an opportunity presents itself in the Senate, which is busy with the impeachment trial of Judge Halstead Ritter.

No Opposition.

Little, if any, opposition is expected. Secretary Wallace, who appeared before the committee yesterday, indicated he expected to to start the work of obtaining the information immediately.

Meanwhile, Henry P. Fletcher, chairman of the Republican National Committee, demanded to know "how much longer President Roosevelt's farm experts will be able to cover their tracks." He demanded names of the big beneficiaries of the farm program as well as the amounts they received.

"Secretary Wallace has made public only a few of the big payments," he said, "but those few admissions make clear why Secretary Wallace was loathe to make public the names of those who have been receiving the large AAA payments.

Commends Wallace.

"The country was laboring under the impression that the billion-dollar farm benefit fund was being parceled out to individual farmers who are in financial distress and in need of some reasonable assistance in return for their co-operation in carrying out the AAA program."

Vandenberg said that he understood Wallace had made his report on large payments "only when he heard I was going to make a speech about them." He said he had not planned such a speech.

"I am very glad that Secretary Wallace has changed his mind and now indicates willingness to reasonably co-operate in letting the public know what has become of its money," Vandenberg said in a written statement.

LET KIDNEYS FLUSH OUT 3 LBS. A DAY

Clean Out 15 Miles of Kidney Tubes

Nature put over 15 miles of tiny tubes and filters in your kidneys to strain the waste matter out of the blood. Kidneys should pass 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter.

When the passing of water is scanty, with smarting and burning, the 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

If kidneys don't empty 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter, your body may take up some of these poisons causing serious trouble. Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, which have been used successfully by millions of people for over 40 years. They give happy relief and help the kidneys to flush out 3 pounds a day. Insist on Doan's Pills.

Massachusetts Law On Oath Upheld

Boston, April 6 (AP).—The Massachusetts House of Representatives lined up overwhelmingly today in favor of the teachers' oath law.

By a vote of 133 to 88 the House rejected a bill to repeal the law, which, enacted last year, requires all school teachers in the State to swear to uphold Federal and State constitutions.

A year ago the vote for the law was 121 to 81.

After three turbulent days of committee hearings in the largest auditorium of the Statehouse, the House disposed of the bill today in scarcely an hour.

Short, chunky Representative Thomas Dorgan, father of the oath law, bounced to his feet to make the first speech when the measure came up.

"I can't understand that any American citizen would refuse to uphold the Constitution," he roared.

Crash of Plane Fatal to 5 Held 'Unavoidable'

Coroner's Jury Investigates Army Craft Tragedy in Pennsylvania.

By the Associated Press.

Fredericksburg, Pa., April 6.—A coroner's jury tonight described as "unavoidable" the accident in which five Army airmen died when their plane crashed in the Blue Mountains near the Berks-Lebanon County line and burst into flames.

Hastily gathered in the little town of Rehrersburg, about 8 miles from the place of the crash, the jurors—businessmen and farmers—heard testimony for a half hour and then deliberated on the verdict for an hour.

The twin-motored bomber, after struggling last night against disaster in a rainy mist, smashed against a hillside and was destroyed by fire.

The plane left Pottstown Airport last evening for Washington after a week-end flight to Cleveland. The occupants, recovered this morning from the twisted, battered wreckage, were identified by officers at Langley Field as Lieut. Stetson Brown, St. Johnsbury, Vt.; Staff Sergeant Ernest Endy, of Oley, Pa.; Private Arthur Metz, of near Chambersburg, Pa.; Private William Yost, McKees Rock, Pa., and Cadet Paul Amspaugh, Cleveland.

Navy Speeds Search For Arms Runners

By the Associated Press.

A Navy destroyer steamed under forced draft through the Caribbean last night on a State Department mission to prevent, if possible, the suspected smuggling of arms and ammunition to supposed revolutionists in Honduras.

Two vessels were its quarry—a yacht and a pilot boat—which were believed to be carrying the contraband to the Central American republic under American registry. Their names were given here as the "Adventuress" and the "Tormalong."

Somewhere near the Gulf of Honduras, the destroyer—the U. S. S. Manley—expected to sight the two ships probably today. It was under orders not to capture them, but to keep them under surveillance until their exact identity and the precise nature of their cargoes could be ascertained.

Edmund Breese, 64, Veteran Actor, Dies

New York, April 6 (AP).—Edmund Breese, 64, veteran actor, who was cast this season in the Broadway play, "The Night of January 16th," died today.

A native of Brooklyn, Breese first appeared on the stage at Eureka Springs, Ark., in 1895. From that date, Breese was cast regularly in scores of plays, touring the principal cities of the country.

His initial stage appearance here was in "Monte Cristo" in 1898. Then followed parts in a score of Shakespearean plays.

Fisherman Is Drowned; Two Others Are Sought

Pocomoke City, Md., April 6 (AP).—Three fishermen are believed to have drowned last night when high winds upset their boat in the Pocomoke River.

The body of Silas Colona, 40, has been recovered. His two companions are missing. Watermen are dragging for their bodies.

The men who set out with Colona were Frank Dryden, 50, and William Blackwell, 35. In a small open boat they started out to cast their shad net. When the men had not returnd this morning, relatives became worried and a searching party set out.

A short distance off shore they found the overturned boat. Nearby was the net, with Colona's body entangled in it.

Sold Cow to Buy Liquor, Is Placed on Probation

Chicago, April 6 (AP).—She didn't mind it so much when her husband sold the radio and other household effects to buy drinks, Mrs. Amelia Valatis told Judge Edward S. Scheffler today, but when she returned home and found he had sold Bessie, their cow, it was beyond her endurance.

"That was the last straw, Judge," she said. "Bessie was a good cow and gave us 12 quarts of milk a day."

Martin Valatis said he didn't care for milk and that he got $35 for the animal.

Judge Scheffler put Martin on six months' probation when he promised he would never tough another drop of whisky, and would see that Bessie was returned.

Supreme Court Rejects Appeal On Gold Case

Clause Guaranteeing Bond Payment in Foreign Cash Is Enforced.

The Supreme Court yesterday declined to hear an appeal on the decision of a lower court that legislation barring payment of obligations in gold does not prohibit collection of the equivalent value in foreign currency when bonds contain provision for that alternate method of payments.

The decision of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in New York had been to the effect that the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. was obligated to pay $42 on a $25 gold bond coupon or the equivalent value of Dutch guilders. The decision, which now stands, was in favor of the Anglo-Continantale Treuhand, a corporation in Liechtenstein.

American corporations, according to the record, have issued approximately $980,000,000 in bonds with the alternative provision.

The Supreme Court was told that the following corporations had issued bonds that might be affected by the ruling: Bethlehem Steel Company, $12,759,000; Lackawanna Steel Company, $6,492,000; Southern Pacific Company, $24,833,000; Pacific Gas & Electric Co., $35,782,000, and the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company, $8,063,000.

From New York, the Associated Press reported that refusal of the Supreme Court to interfere with the lower court decision would have little effect on the railroad because the road is undergoing reorganization under the bankruptcy act.

What effect the action would have on the large amount of bonds of other corporations which contain so-called gold clauses was problematical owing to the fact that the number held by foreign owners is not generally a matter of record.

The company bringing action against the railroad is listed as owning 411 bonds of $1,000 par value each. Interest was paid last year in American dollars. This action brought about the lawsuit.

Market quotations on the railroad bonds were little affected.

New York, April 6 (AP).—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals upheld unanimously today emergency legislation affecting the possession and disposition of gold as to foreign owners.

The decision denied that the gold acts constituted "ex post facto legislation."

The opinion was handed down in a suit brought by Hugh Bersse Finanza-Korporation Aktien Gesellschaft, a Swiss corporation, against Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co. and Federal Reserve Banks of New York.

Nun Jailed in Reich.

Werzburg, Germany, April 6 (AP).—Mother Superior Crecenzia Zehetbaur was sentenced to five months imprisonment and fined 500 marks (about $200) today on a charge of smuggling foreign exchange.

Coogan Describes Crash Fatal to 4

Los Angeles, April 6 (AP).—Jackie Coogan, "The Kid" of silent pictures, described in court today the mountain road plunge at 40 to 50 miles an hour which killed his father, John H. Coogan, and three of his friends.

Coogan, now 21, was the first witness at trial of two damage suits for $300,000, brought against him by relatives of two of the crash victims.

"There was a curve—our car continued straight ahead and went over the embankment," Coogan testified, explaining his father pulled out to avoid hitting another machine.

The crash occurred May 4, 1935, east of San Diego. Young Coogan, riding in the rumble seat, alone survived. Trent (Junior) Durkin, film juvenile; Robert L. Horner, writer; Charles Jones, Coogan ranch foreman and the Elder Coogan were killed.

The Story Behind
Your Eyeglasses
Bi-Focal Lenses

In 1784, Benjamin Franklin invented the first bi-focal lens, now known as the Franklin or split bi-focal. In a letter to George Whately in May, 1785, he describes them in these words: "I imagine it will be pretty generally true that the same convexity of the glass through which a man sees clearest and best at the distance is not the best for greater distances. I, therefore, had formerly two pairs of spectacles which I shifted occasionally, as in traveling I sometimes read and often wanted to regard the prospect. Finding this change troublesome and not always sufficiently ready, I had the glasses cut, and half of each kind associated in the same circle, thus . . .

"By this means, as I wear my spectacles constantly, I have only to move my eyes up or down as I want to see distinctly far or near, the proper glasses being always ready. This I find more particularly convenient since my being in France . . .

"When one's ears are not well accustomed to the sound of a language, a sight of the features of him that speaks helps to explain, so that I understand French better by the help of my spectacles."

Baldwin Gains Foreign Policy Approval Vote

Cabinet Survives a Bitter Laborite Assault by 361 to 145 Ballot.

By the Associated Press.

London, April 6.—The British government emerged successfully tonight from a storm of criticism of its policies toward Italy and Germany, winning a vote of confidence in the House of Commons by 361 to 145.

Clement Richard Atlee, leader of the Laborite opposition, accused the cabinet of "pursuing a wobbly course." There were charges of "senile decay" against Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin's government.

Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, concluding the long, acrimonious debate, declared the Labor and Liberal opposition members were urging Britain "to wave a revolver in the face of aggressors, regardless of whether the revolver is loaded or not, in the hope that the sight of it would deter them from their purpose."

The specific question on which the confidence vote was taken was whether men and women civil servants should receive equal pay. Last Wednesday, at a snap vote on the same question, the Baldwin regime was defeated.

Baldwin Rumored Quitting.

The assault on the Conservative Baldwin administration followed published reports that Baldwin might resign at the end of May—although parliamentary circles discredited the reports.

"The issue is, 'Has the Government the confidence of the House and the confidence of the country,'" said Atlee in a bitter speech. "Has it any confidence in itself? Have its members confidence in each other?"

In the lobbies, members declared there is at present no adequate reason for reorganization of the government, although changes are believed probable after coronation ceremonies for King Edward in May, 1937.

The members said reports of the prime minister's deafness have been exaggerated, emphasizing Baldwin has no trouble hearing any ordinary conversation.

Prime Minister Opens.

Baldwin himself opened the debate today with a long speech on the legislative aspects of the question before the chamber. Atlee followed immediately with the attack which his audience interpreted as directed at the prime minister.

"The osseous deficiency with which Winston Churchill had charged Ramsay MacDonald (former premier) seems to have spread throughout the government administration," Atlee asserted.

The Labor leader's critical address was followed by a speech of similar tenor from Winston Churchill, former cabinet minister and now a Conservative member.

Churchill charged Ethiopia is helpless before the Italian invasion because of the weakness and indecision of the British government.

"All we have done for the Ethiopians is to put an embargo on their obtaining arms before they were attacked," he said.

"We pressed France into a course of action which did not go far enough to help Ethiopia but went far enough to sever her from Italy, with the result an occasion was given to Herr Hitler to tear up treaties and reoccupy the Rhineland."

Cheers sounded from the opposition benches as Churchill charged:

"It was a grievous thing to encourage a primitive population to desperate resistence and then leave them to their fate."

to strengthen her military line-up by seeking the abolition of sanctions against Italy.

The agreement, which came after a four-hour session, was reported reached after a number of divergent views were harmonized by alterations of the original draft.

Flandin to Move.

Flandin will begin his drive to have sanctions against Italy lifted when the League of Nations Committee of Thirteen meets Wednesday at Geneva to take up the question of peace negotiations in the Italo-Ethiopian war.

France also is expected to ask the League to appoint a European commission to study the French counter-proposals to Hitler's offers.

A communique said the cabinet "proposed a constructive plan of action for peace" which France intends to submit to the League Council, but did not disclose its proposals.

French sources indicated military experts who go to London for general staff conversations this week with the British and Belgians will seek to learn how many British and Belgian troops could be massed on the frontiers to fight off a possible German attack.

The cabinet, by its rejection of Hitler's proposals and by submitting a counterplan to Geneva, gained time until after the elections for the Chamber of Deputies, April 26 and May 3, French commentators pointed out, since the League is unlikely to consider the peace proposals before the middle of May.

A possible advantage to the government in the elections by its stand against Germany was seen in some circles.

Italian Gas Cited.

London, April 6 (AP). — Great Britain is pressing for immediate discussion by the League of Nations of charges Italy is employing poison gas against civilians in Ethiopia, it was disclosed today.

Anthony Eden, foreign secretary, told the House of Commons that steps already have been taken toward a League consideration of Ethiopian charges Italy is violating rules of warfare by using poison gas against noncombatants, and also is bombing open towns.

Little Entente Fights Austrian Conscript Law

Joint Protest by 3 Powers Terms Act Violation of St. Germain Pact.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, April 6.—The three nations of the Little Entente protested jointly today against the new Austrian conscription law for military and public works service.

The protest from Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, and Rumania—was presented to Egon Berger-Waldenegg, Austrian foreign minister.

The Little Entente, terming the conscription law a unilateral violation of the treaty of St. German, declared the three nations reserve "the right to say, at a later date, what measures they consider necessary to protect their interests."

Would Limit Army.

The protest came after representative of the nations had conferred at Bucharest. The treaty violation charged to Austria was discussed as provisions of the pact placing a limit on Austria's military strength were reviewed.

The notes to the Austrian government expresed regret that Austria, as a member of the League of Nation, found it necessary to take steps which "the League Council, under similar circumstances, solemnly condemned in its resolution of March 17, 1935 (when Germany was condemned for its rearmament program)."

The powers asserted that Austria, through its new law, was repudiating the military clause of the St. Germain pact and "under these circumstances we, as co-signers, deem it our duty to protest energetically against the enactment of the Austrian law with which we are concerned here."

The three nations declared they were protesting both as signers of the St. Germain treaty and as members of the League.

Can't Permit It, Say Powers.

"The Entente, under no circumstances, can permit Austria to create new rights for itself by disregarding its international obligations by unilateral action," they declared.

After accepting the protest notes, an Austrian foreign office spokesman said:

"When Austria enacted the law for compulsory military and civil service it did so careful deliberation and in the knowledge it is serving the needs of the Austrian people and assuring an independent existence for the nation."

Soviet Exploration Plane Forced Down in Arctic

Moscow, April 6 (AP).—One of the two Soviet airplanes attempting the first flight from Russia to Franz Josef Land was forced down today near the Kara Straight.

The other plane landed safely at Matochkin, Shar Island, Novaya Zemlya ("New Land"), in the Arctic Ocean. The Kara Straight separates Novaya Zemlya and the Vaygach Islands. Both planes had taken off from Anderma, on the Continent, this morning. No further details were received.

The flight is to obtain data on the possibility of a transarctic air route to America.

Constitution Day Urged for June 21

A joint resolution declaring June 21 to be the true anniversary of the establishment of the Constitution of the United States, and providing for its observance as Constitution Day, was introduced in the House of Representatives yesterday by Representative William N. Rogers (Democrat), New Hampshire.

Representative Rogers pointed out that, due to the fact that the signing of the Constitution took place on September 17, 1787, that date has been universally accepted as Constitution Day. His statement recalled that Article VII of the Constitution provided that "the ratification of the Conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same." Since New Hampshire was the ninth State, acting on June 21, 1788, the Constitution was established on that day, he argued.

Details for the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial, to be celebrated from 1937 to 1939, are meanwhile being worked out by a commission headed by Representative Sol Bloom (Democrat), New York.

Each Puff Less Acid

A LIGHT SMOKE

OF RICH, RIPE-BODIED TOBACCO

Over a period of years, certain basic advances have been made in the selection and treatment of cigarette tobaccos for Lucky Strike Cigarettes.

They include preliminary analyses of the tobacco selected; use of center leaves; the higher heat treatment of tobacco ("Toasting"); consideration of acid-alkaline balance, with consequent definite improvement in flavor; and controlled uniformity in the finished product.

All these combine to produce a superior cigarette—a modern cigarette, a cigarette made of rich, ripe-bodied tobaccos—A Light Smoke.

Luckies are less acid

Recent chemical tests show* that other popular brands have an excess of acidity over Lucky Strike of from 53% to 100%.

Hauptmann's Body Is Burned; Fight Rages On

Widow Breaks at Services; Hoffman Determined to Seek Out Accomplices.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 6.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann's body was given to a crematory's flames today, but events stemming from efforts to disprove his guilt continue their course.

The widow, Mrs. Anna Hauptmann, stood before his opened casket and vowed to make someone "pay" for his death.

Gov. Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey was pictured by Lieut. Robert Hicks, criminologist associated with him in the last weeks of the executive's campaign to "break the case," as still being determined to locate possible accomplices of the stolid Bronx carpenter.

Seek Wendel "Confessional."

In Brooklyn, the weird story Paul H. Wendel told of being kidnaped in February and beaten to yield a "confession" of the Sourlands crime spurred half a hundred detectives to seek the house in which he said four men kept him prisoner.

It was a strange funeral they gave Hauptmann in the stone crematory overlooking a Lutheran cemetery. Hundreds of neighbors and children pressed excitedly against the tall iron fence, and a score of police pushed them back from locked gates.

Mrs. Hauptmann spent an hour with the body. "Richard, some day your name will be cleared and those responsible will pay. For they murdered—murdered—you, my Richard," she said slowly.

A few minutes later there was a brief service behind locked doors in an office of the crematory building. The Revs. John Matthiesen and D. G. Werner had pledged to New Jersey authorities that only the legal limit of six persons would be present before the open casket. The ministers prayed in German.

Widow Breaks at Services.

Then the casket, sealed, was trundled into the chapel, where a score of Yorkville friends of the Hauptmann's waited. The widow sat in the front row, weeping bitterly throughout the German and English eulogies. At the end she broke completely and was led swiftly to a car while attendants shoved the casket into an incinerator.

Lloyd Fisher, Hauptmann's attorney, was a mourner.

Officials of the Fresh Pond Crematory, where the rites took place, said they did not know where the ashes would be sent. Temporarily, they said, they would be put in a bronze urn and stored under lock and key in a concrete vault.

The Brooklyn investigation of Wendel's story was strengthened today by Tailor Harry Fromberg's identification of Wendel's suit as the one from which he washed bloodstains on February 24. Wendel had said his captors took his suit to be cleaned that day before he was returned to New Jersey and freed.

Describes Man.

The tailor described the man who brought and called for the garments, but was unable to tell who he was.

While District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan, of Brooklyn, and a New Jersey grand jury went forward with their checks upon Wendel's story and his possible complicity in the kidnap-murder, the Federal Bureau of Investigation disclaimed all participation.

Director J. Edgar Hoover said at Washington that "no agents of the Federal Bureau have been assigned to the Wendel case."

Assembly Balks Inquiries.

Trenton, N. J., April 6 (AP).—Two resolutions providing for investigation of the Hauptmann case—one by a citizens' committee and the other by a legislative committee—were defeated by the New Jersey Assembly tonight.

The citizens' committee investigation, proposed by an anti-administration Republican, was directed at Gov. Harold G. Hoffman's activities during his reopened investigation. The proposal was defeated 23 to 31, 8 votes short.

Immediately after its defeat, a Hoffman supporter presented another resolution for an investigation of the kidnaping case from its inception, including the activities of the Governor, the State police, prosecution officials and the cost of the Hauptmann trial, which approximated $125,000. It was defeated by a vote of 10 for to 45 against.

Pan-American Health Experts Open Sessions

Dr. Cumming Named Head of Parley Here, Called for Disease Fight.

United in a common campaign against disease, national health directors representing 250,000,000 citizens of Latin America and the United States, yesterday opened plenary sessions of their third quinquennial conference.

The meeting, most of whose sessions will be held in the Pan-American Union Building, will continue daily through April 15.

"We see today," said Dr. Leo S. Rowe, director general of the Pan-American Union, in his address of welcome, "more clearly than ever before how closely the work of the public health and sanitary authorities is bound up with the welfare, the happiness and even the standard of living of the masses of the people. Efficiency in this service is coming to be recognized as one of the first essentials of good government in a democracy."

William Phillips, Undersecretary of State, speaking in behalf of the United States Government, said:

"There can be no more important work than that in which you are engaged, the protection of the health, the lives, of the people. It is a most inspiring experience to witness the assembling in conference for the common fight against disease of the representatives of nearly 250,000,000 of human beings. You are fortunte indeed that your deliberations tend to increase the good will and good fellowship that should always exist among the people of our respective countries."

Former Surgeon Gen. Hugh S. Cumming, director of the Pan-American Sanitary Bureau, outlined the objectives of the conference as follows:

Thwarting the introduction of communicable diseases into America from countries in the Eastern Hemisphere; improving sanitary conditions at seaports so that costly quarantines may be avoided; stimulating of health authorities throughout the Americas to continued efforts for control and eradication of disease; prompt reporting, and the promotion of cordial relations among peoples of the several republics.

Stephen Hayes Funeral Today; Former Consul

Ecuadorian Envoy '31-'33, Native of District, Dead in Pittsburgh.

Funeral services for Stephen Q. Hayes, 82, former Ecuadorian consul and a native of Washington, who died yesterday at his home in Pittsburgh, will be held today in that city. He had been ill for several days.

Born in Washington December 17, 1873, Hayes received his A. B. degree from Georgetown University in 1892. He later studied engineering at Johns Hopkins University.

In 1922 he was a construction engineer for the Japanese imperial government. Since 1928 he had been engaged in engineering in South American countries.

From 1931 to 1933 he was Ecuadorian consul at Pittsburgh and was secertary and treasurer of the Consular Association of Pittsburgh in 1932 and 1933.

He is survived by six children, Mrs. R. J. Peterman, Mrs. L. J. Hartman, Stephen Quentin, jr., Charles Joseph, John Henry and Isabel Gillespie Hayes.

The WPA Hearings.

Administrative jobs in the WPA have been given to approximately 56,000 persons "friendly" to the New Deal who believe in (but probably cannot define) the policies of WPA. Mr. Hopkins avers that he would be "a plain damn fool" to award such positions to unsympathetic supervisors. While his language is stronger than his administrative ability, there will be general agreement that politics is not the fundamental trouble with the WPA.

It is not so much the way in which Mr. Hopkins has managed the system as the system itself which has led to intolerable abuses. And, for that very reason, the hearings before the House Appropriations Committee on the proposed $1,500,000,000 relief appropriation ought to be devoted chiefly to an examination of the inherent defects in the present methods of administering relief, and the substitution of something more intelligent.

Congressional hearings are not necessary to furnish evidence concerning the political scandals that are certain to develop in a sprawling, slipshod Federal organization like the WPA. Corrupt practices should, of course, be ruthlessly eradicated when discovered. But it is quite certain that the wastes resulting from the introduction of politics and outright graft into the relief system are much less serious than the wastes due to inherently unsound methods of administering relief. Consequently, the Appropriations Committee ought to consider plans for dispensing with the services of all the WPA's "friendly" administrators, instead of wasting time upon complaints of the political activities of some of them.

What is needed is a complete revision of the slapdash policies now followed. If the committee is wise, it will first make Mr. Hopkins explain his theory and system of relief, and will then insist upon thoroughgoing reforms as a condition precedent to approval of the request for more relief funds. That would be a much more constructive service than could be rendered by merely listening to a recital of unsavory relief scandals.

And if the investigation proves protracted, the WPA can be kept alive on a hand to mouth basis, without any contraction of necessary relief, while its long-range substitute is being planned. Congress, in Mr. Hopkins' lively language, would be the "plain damn fool" if it appropriated another billion and a half for the present "friendly" crowd of amateur evangelists to scatter to the winds.

Holbein Out Of Holstein.

Grant Wood, the painter, once said that all his best ideas came to him while he was milking a cow. Perhaps the recent program of plowing under cattle, in his section of the country, has caused the fount of his inspiration to run a bit dry. At any rate, it does seem that this portrayer of the Mid-Western Gothic has rushed in where most artists fear to tread. With brush in hand and audacity his banner, he has illustrated a book for children!

Whether it be for love or livelihood, this particular labor appears to have a peculiar effect upon those who undertake it. Either the result is so good or so bad that the public never remembers the artist for anything else, or the artist himself becomes utterly won over to the practice of painting the Never-Never Land. Reginald Birch, at 79, is still trying to live down his illustrations of Little Lord Fauntleroy. This revered Manhattanite has illustrated some 180 other books, but the little boy with the Birch-given burden of golden curls is still the sissy in Mr. Birch's closet.

Sir John Tenniel grounded his artistic bark on an egg, a dormouse and a Cheshire cat in "Alice in Wonderland." His superb rendition of the March Hare's fantastic tea party gave it an importance second only to the one in Boston. Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee have put Tenniel's great mosaic in the Victoria and Albert Museum in the shade, and his stippled water-color drawings hung in the Royal Institute of Water-Colors are as unknown as the sphinx's secret compared to his figure of the Red Queen.

Now Grant Wood, who started the back-to-the-farm movement in art, has made eight bucolic paintings along substantial, hearty lines for the edification of the tiny tots. This experiment will obviously mark a milestone in the Iowan's career. But only time will tell whether or not he was sitting on a milk stool when he made the choice; whether or not, indeed, he can derive Holbein out of Holstein.

Not The Primary Blunder.

The obvious reluctance of Secretary Wallace to publish the amounts and destination of the large AAA payments is easier to understand than to justify.

Such information should have been made available from the inception of the Administration's production-control program, not simply as a safeguard against illegitimate diversion of funds, but as a means of showing precisely how the system works. Congress has displayed a shameful indifference to its legislative responsibilities in failing to demand a full accounting before voting to continue agricultural subsidies under a control measure thinly disguised as a soil conservation act. Belated publication of the AAA data seems rather like locking the stable door after the horse has been stolen.

Of course, there is nothing sinister or even surprising about the fact that some growers have received immense sums from the Government to induce them to cut down their production of cotton, wheat, sugar and other crops. In paying uniform rates of benefits, varying with the number of acres withdrawn from cultivation or the units of production involved, the AAA has followed a logical method of procedure. As Secretary Wallace says, the only alternatives would be reliance upon partial control plans, excluding large producers, or a compulsory breaking up of large-scale holdings. The former method would be invidious and ineffective, while the latter would call for a revolutionary change in our social structure.

Moreover, it should be kept in mind that the so-called benefit payments are not outright gifts to the recipients. On the contrary, the producer surrenders his right to grow certain products in the hope that this abstention will bring higher food prices for a restricted output and thus make his total income from sales and benefits larger than it otherwise would be from sales alone. The fact that some farmers have refused to sign AAA contracts indicates that the subsidies are sometimes thought to be an inadequate compensation for reducing output.

While the public is richly entitled to know the names of the recipients of these Treasury payments, the record should be examined without prejudice. Those who approve of paying farm producers not to grow crops cannot logically object to the benefits bestowed upon large-scale producers whose co-operation is needed to carry out Nation-wide restriction plans. Publicity for the big payments, however, will intensify doubts as to the extent of the benefits conferred upon the small tenant farmers and the share-croppers, for whose assistance some naively thought the AAA program was designed.

On the other hand, those who oppose the Administration's agricultural program in principle will not be greatly influenced by the publication of details concerning the size and distribution of benefit payments. They do not need further information on the undesirability of a program which pays land owners not to produce. The fact that this phase of the New Deal gives most to those who need it least is ridiculous. But it is not the primary blunder.

The Spending Urge.

In urging the Senate to pass the $50,000,000 seed loan bill over the President's veto, the Agriculture Committee has shown an almost contemptuous indifference to repeated Presidential admonitions to keep appropriations within budgetary limits. The committee's decision to press for passage of the rejected bill is the more indefensible because it reverses the position taken less than six weeks ago, when the veto was announced.

By contrast with the grandiose spending program of some flood control advocates, the seed loan measure calls for a modest outlay. Nevertheless, the committee's stand heightens the apprehension already aroused by the seeming desire of Senator Robinson and other Administration leaders in the Senate to expand the flood control bill into an extravagant pork barrel measure. It is painfully evident that Congress is not concerned over the size of the already huge deficit, and not impressed by the President's warnings.

The tenacity with which Congress clings to the lesser subsidies is in some respects more disturbing than efforts to raid the Treasury in a large way. Spectacular forms of extravagance at least arouse public indignation and emphasize the necessity of economy. But seed loans and other relatively inconspicuous methods of undermining fiscal solvency are difficult to combat so long as Congressmen have their ears to the ground, listening to the murmurs of their constituents.

In his veto of the seed loan bill the President pointed out that the amount asked, was, in his opinion, larger than needed. Furthermore, no provision was made in the bill to cover the additional charges imposed by this unbudgeted item. As an alternative form of aid, the President allocated $30,000,000 of emergency relief funds to "taper off" the crop loan program. That would seem to be a liberal arrangement. Yet the Senate Agriculture Committee sweeps aside the President's arguments on the ground that the Farm Credit Administration is withholding loans from farmers who receive relief payments from other sources.

This flimsy excuse for obstructing a genuine effort at economy is not strengthened by criticism of policies now followed by the FCA. If the methods of the FCA are faulty, the remedy very clearly lies in a modification of its regulations, not in a vote of additional funds to be disbursed without proper safeguards.

It is essential to scrutinize every spending plan, not only on its merits but with due regard for its effect upon the budgetary position. We have to ask not only whether the expenditure is desirable but whether we can afford it. Unfortunately, Congress has not yet reached the stage of rejecting undesirable projects, and is deaf to suggestions that it cannot continue to increase outlays without finding new sources of income.

University Boondoggling.

Not content merely to denounce the threat to intellectual progress implicit in continuous extension of the sphere of government, President Angell of Yale proposes to meet the challenge squarely. His first move, as outlined in his annual report, will be to take stock of his own institution's "tangible contribution to the common weal." Properly believing that universities must justify their existence on the basis of the service they render to society, he recommends that Yale concentrate on advancing "our fundamental knowledge of the forces which control human life and civilization in all its phases."

Dr. Angell's attack on the increasing pressure against academic freedom is timely. In Washington, and all other communities afflicted with teacher's oath legislation, the point of his criticism will be quickly grasped. The total defeat of education by propaganda in Germany, Russia and Italy makes clear the urgency of his warning. And he does well to refer to the undermining of endowments by punitive taxation as one way in which education can be struck down. There is a clear warning in the current appeal of the Johns Hopkins University for what is ominously called a "sustaining fund."

In urging a restatement of the aims of a higher education, however, Dr. Angell admits that in the picture as a whole the universities have a real responsibility. With no thought of impugning devotion to abstract knowledge, he calls for broader study of those problems affecting the very heart of civilization today. It is refreshing to hear the president of Yale asserting that not a few universities have abused their tax-exempt endowments, and their valuable liberty of action, "to pursue courses of little appreciable human value beyond the gratification of the often highly esoteric interests of a particular scholar."

The public in general, and college alumni in particular, will rejoice in President Angell's appraisal. The feeling has long been growing that in a world of slums and slaughter it is anomalous to find excellent brains persisting in cloistered discussions of rare dactyl usages. One way to cut down boondoggling by the Government is to discourage it in doctoral dissertations.

The Unconquered Elements.

For the second time in a week, terrific winds have ravaged Southern States. Man has been reminded again that, although he now knows much of the causes of these phenomena, he is almost as powerless as his primitive ancestors to devise protection from elements too strong for humanity to harness. Monsoons, cyclones, tornadoes, hurricanes, earthquakes and tidal waves continue to be the portion of many otherwise favored parts of the earth's surface.

Biblical references to deaths and losses from such occurrences are relatively few. Yet the supernatural factors in these uprisings of elemental forces persists in our almost fatalistic attitude toward their onset. Nor is this surprising. Although scientific research suggests that man might take a number of preventive steps—the winds and the waters continue to pay little heed to our feeble gestures of control. We are far better at organizing defenses against our fellow man than against storms which have no respect for state or sovereign rights.

The disastrous Southern tornadoes emphasize the vast and unsolved problem of understanding, let alone pacifying, nature. That continues an unanswered question of living. We have not yet mastered our environment. The world is not yet ours.

Rest Of Us Will Pay The Bills.

From the Boston Transcript.

Living quarters of excellent type will soon be provided for many dozens of families in a fine new development now being built in South Boston by the Federal Government. The project has everything in its favor except one hard fact. After these new homes have been built, everyone admits—even including the Federal authorities—that their occupants cannot possibly pay rent enough to cover normal tax costs for fire and police protection, for schools and other necessary public services. A deficit will result, which other members of the public must meet.

The Commonwealth may wisely spend money for any well-proved housing development, but the State must be skeptical of every experimental plan which not only calls for a large initial outlay of public funds but also seeks, for the future, perpetual tax exemption in whole or in part. This tends to impair the financial soundness of all municipalities. Actions of the Federal Government under the New Deal appear subject to no local control whatsoever. Until Washington grants co-operative authority to direct housing ventures, co-operative cash to support them should be refused.

All communications must carry the writer's name and address, though pen names are permitted at the Editor's discretion. In fairness to other correspondents, brevity is requested. Letters are subject to condensation.

Support For Section 213.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The writer has many friends in the Government service, 95 per cent of whom believe that Section 213 is right and should have been in force years ago. The other 5 per cent are those who have been affected by it. In many cases favoritism has been shown and certain married couples have not been affected by this law. This should not be allowed.

This "living in sin" because a married couple cannot live under $4,000 a year salary is simply ballyhoo, for there are thousands of married men and women who are living happily together with children at $1,200 a year and even less. True they cannot cultivate taxicab feet, own high-priced cars, or live in elevator apartments, but they get along nicely.

I would suggest that these women who have been let out and want to work go down in the business district and see about a position as clerk or bookkeeper. I know they would be shocked to find that the pay is 40 per cent less than their Government jobs; that they would get only one week's vacation with pay; that they would have sick absences taken out of their pay envelope; that they would have a 48-hour work week and that they would not be allowed to smoke on the job.

No wonder they do not want these positions after a Government job.

Military Expenditures.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few years ago there was no indication that America would be a nation to follow in the footsteps of Prussian militarism. To the contrary—the post-war generation expressed a revulsion for anything remotely connected with the iron heel that had placed a world in shambles; America had entered the war to defend and make the world safe for democracy and profits, and now that the holocaust was over, we intended to sit back and enjoy the virtues of peace and prosperity—the sacred twins of so-called American individualism free from tyranny and the military.

Times have changed. The cradle of democracy creaks from the oppressive weight of a new baby clad in the armor of Mars and wrecking the crib of liberty with the kicks of its iron-heeled boots. The Nation aptly remarks editorially: "In a period of our history in which militarism cannot help playing havoc with our national destiny, we are going in for militarism. And yet the problems which agitate American life and split American society are not problems that can be met by the mind of the soldier or the point of the bayonet. They are problems of economic organization and statecraft, of technological planning, of human understanding."

The casual way in which we have allowed a military group to assume control of American finances and government is equaled only by the nonchalant manner we reflect toward this peculiar form of legalized banditry. When Congress enacted a law to discharge the officers and men of the additional army of the Revolution to take effect June 15, 1800, a celebration was held in Alexandria where toasts were drunk to the Tree of Liberty, and to the hope that every nation might soon be freed from supporting "that engine of despotism"—a standing army. The excessive expenditures of our military under the thin disguise of "national defense" will destroy American Government as it destroyed German and Italian governments. Even stupid people should remember 1917.

Will Take Surplus Pets.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Will supposedly civilized educated Christian adult human beings, for mercy's sake, please stop abandoning and dropping baby kittens and puppies with or without their mothers in country fields and woods, roadsides, or elsewhere?

With two animal shelters operating in the District and nearby Maryland and Virginia, beginning with the word "animal" and easily noted in the phone book, what excuse can there be for such cowardly actions?

The Animal Protective Association is willing to take your surplus kittens, puppies, dogs, cats or any other creatures and it won't cost a cent, if that is what is worrying those, who, to save a few pennies donation for a humane disposal of pets of which they tire, would rather play the coward and subject them to starvation and cold.

Washington's Parks.

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: What was once known as Lafayette Park has been getting worse all winter and, now that spring is here, it is being "improved" and mangled by having highways paved all through it.

No one seemed to need more walks in this park. I have crossed it daily for months and I have never seen its walks crowded at all, except with pigeons. The urns have been moved nearer, to within a few feet of the sidewalks, and for fear that the public could not see them, apparently they are building wide concrete roads by them.

It looks as if some surveyor or draftsman, looking at a nice blueprint, had a brainstorm and thought he would complete the geometric designs by adding wide curves all around the perimeter of the park, moving large clumps of yew and anything else in the way to complete the pretty diagram. For what reason?

With the street sidewalks on the four sides and the new concrete highways within the park, we will soon have about 50 per cent of the entire park in concrete pavements, which will be welcomed on Washington's August days.

What Lafayette Park really needed was more water on the grass in summer and the old newspapers and other trash cleaned up.

JEROME GERARD.
Washington, April 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am in hearty accord with recent editorials and letters in The Post denouncing the official vandalism being perpetrated on our local parks under the authority of the National Capital Parks, and with the apparent sanction of the Fine Arts Commission.

If the justification and purpose for these "projects" is to make work for men, why not make more work and continuous and steady work by appointing a great many more men to tend the parks, to weed, water and clean them and to police them against the depredations of the untrained part of the populace?

Subsistence Homesteads.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recent news items concerning taxation and inactive 'realty indicate the the Government's plans to develop subsistence homesteads are about to be abandoned on account of no co-operation. This, I believe, will be one of the greatest mistakes our Government can make. The writer can only reiterate in another form what he has said for the past several years.

"If 'trusted friends' through legalized mistakes have taken practically all our substance . . . and overcrowded our cities with victimized investors and unemployed, then our only remedy is to legalize a form of arbitration to adjust differences and to develop from coast-to-coast house and garden communities with workshops, amusements, etc., where millions of unemployed would be glad to settle and find a new form of security and profit."

Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I turn back to March 18 and say how satisfactory I found your "Miserable Deception" editorial? I have been terribly wrought up and was going to write a letter to your columns, but that editorial said it all and there are thousands who are thinking what you are spreading.

You seem to strike the iron in "Tugwell's Octopus" and the "secrecy" business. We hate the smirking, contemptuous attitude from the New Dealers.

The Vandalism Problem.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I noted with pleasure a splendid letter in The Post of April 4 from Mr. Charles E. Russell. It related to the disgraceful condition pertaining to our parks. Can anything be done to prevent such vandalism?

Inquiry Of Hauptmann Case Urged.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As perhaps an average citizen, and thus speaking as would millions of others, may I express obligation to you for your morning's editorial on the Haupmann case under the caption "The Sense of Proportion." Your balanced comment and appreciation of fundamental issues involved must be welcome to many who, like the writer, have no personal interest in or connection with any of the individuals concerned.

It would be relief to dismiss the whole tragic affair, to be able to regard it as a closed incident. But this cannot be done. As you put it, "The Mosaic law is satisfied: not so the public conscience," and, "Some day the complete connection between the murdered baby and the executed criminal may be revealed. In the interest of justice, which must always stand above the breath of criticism, that is vital."

If we average men are not to lose confidence in the established order, there must be a thorough investigation of the dark corners of this affair. Yesterday's newspapers carried a report vouched for by one of the leading news agencies, from Norwalk, Conn., stating the police of that city have for months had evidence that Fisch offered money in that city, and that this fact had not been published before. This is only one of the recent developments indicating suppression of material evidence.

You are correct in stating, as one of the "uncontrovertible facts," that "the most painstaking review of evidence and further inquiry failed utterly to clear the convicted man. "But it is also true that in the minds of millions Hauptmann was never proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt; to them, though 12 jurors swore most solemnly they had no such doubt, there still is that doubt; to them it is not a question of clearing Hauptmann but of convicting him.

I would urge that it is of the greatest importance to the maintenance of confidence in our social processes that the inquiry into this case be diligently pursued. If the newspapers of the country will use their influence and agencies to insist on such inquiry, and to further it, who would doubt the truth will finally be established?

In addition it may be said that the general practice of placing the power to pardon in executive hands is based on age-long belief that after the cold and precise processes of the judiciary have functioned, there should be an opportunity for the conscience and the purpose of the people to act through their more direct and personal agency, the executive, and so to meet such emergencies as developed in the Hauptmann case. New Jersey saw fit to take the power to pardon out of the hands of the Governor.

The Post Impressionist

Thalia And Melopmene.

Post Office, Tuesday.

FROM his desk in the Library of Congress, Mr. Claus Bogel expresses expert satisfaction with our most recent column on the actor's art—a column for which even we ourselves experienced no vast distaste—and he caps his satisfaction thus:

"I, too, have been asked 'Who was Coquelin?'—by young persons whose criterion of acting is Frederic March. To be sure,—it is our younger generation's misfortune, and no fault, never to have seen the great French comedian. However, flaming youth might at least acquire some knowledge of him through reading, instead of maintaining an attitude worse than even that expressed by a certain New York newspaper's reply to the inquiry 'Who was Edwin Booth?'

"'Edwin Booth,' so ran the answer, 'was a popular actor of Shakepearean roles.'

"'Popular actors—favorite players!' muses Mr. Bogel. "Years ago, one of my young nieces, who had never before been to the theater, was taken to a performance by a stock company of which William Farnum was then the leading man.

"She came to me raving:

"'Uncle Claus, do you know William Farnum? He is the grandest actor I ever saw!"

"To return, however," Mr. Bogel resumes, "to Coquelin. My generation was luckier than the present, and I not only saw Coquelin act on the stage, but also heard him recite—off it.

* * *

"The Young Men's Gymnastic Club of New Orleans gave him a reception and he there, to use the quaint phrase of a still earlier day, 'rendered a recitation'—in French. Of course he was encored. Thereupon he recited the same piece as it would have been given by an Englishman.

"The thing was epatant!

"All of which," Mr. Bogel interpolates, "recalls my conviction that every Englishman thinks French should be pronounced as nearly as possible as if it were English. I remember struggling with George Arliss, attempting to teach him French pronunciation. My efforts were ill rewarded."

* * *

Arliss, a university man and a man whose whole life has been passed learning and playing character parts! If anybody could repeat sounds from dictation, you would say Arliss was that person.

Well, according to this reminiscence, he wasn't. Instead, he drove Bogel to despair.

* * *

"One typical sentence," says our correspondent, "sticks in my mind to this day.

"It was:

"'I want to buy a pair of white gloves.'

"Let me try to write his version phonetically:

"'Zhevuz ashe-tay oon pair duh gong blong.'

"And while we are on this subject of Arlissian French," Mr. Bogel continues. "I'm sure Arliss wouldn't take offense should you fail to overlook his delightful pronunciation of 'Raoul' in 'Leah Kleschna': he made the name 'Roll.' Mrs. Fiske used to listen for it and laugh at it.

"But then, in the same play, our mutual friend W. B. ('Billy') Mack always rendered 'Rue' as 'Rooey!'"

Whereupon Mr. Bogel comes to the real core of his letter:

"I am," he admits, "in full accord with your thesis that the only worthwhile way to 'take in' any dramatic performance is your two-ways-at-once way. I fully agree that one part of the mind should be intent upon the story, believing that what is seen on the stage is then and there happening in real life, unquestioningly accepting the manner of its presentation—the while the other half of the mind should be studying the dramatist's methods, the actors' means, and remaining coldly critical.

"But how many people can do this?"

That question, it appears, involves the whole problem of theatrical illusion. In the average theatergoer's mind, how far can enchantment proceed, anyhow, if disenchantment hangs too tightly to its traces? Concretely, Mr. Bogel inquires:

"If a character is killed in a play, should the actor playing the part acknowledge curtain calls, or should he 'stay dead?'"

We'll ring down today's first curtain with that rising inflection.

THE WHIPPING-POST.

"My Dear Post-Impressionist," writes our dear Mr. Henry M. Ward, "in a recent column, you quote Coleridge as saying:

"'It was an ancient Mariner,
And he stoppeth one of three.'"

Had Coleridge said 'It was an ancient Mariner,' he would have continued 'And he stopped one of three.' The 'Rime of the Ancient Mariner' is written in the present tense, and begins:

"'It is an ancient Mariner.'"

Contritely, the Post-Impressionist mounts the platform and bares his scarred back to the lash.

Senate Court

By Karl Schriftgiesser

A Judge Is Tried.

THE fact that the impeachment trial of Halsted Ritter, gray-haired Florida jurist, is only the twelfth such proceeding in the 137 years that the Senate has been making laws, drew out a big crowd yesterday. The "standnig room only" sign was posted early outside the galleries and men and women stood up to watch Judge Ritter being tried for his alleged "misbehavior and high crimes and misdemeanors," as the articles of impeachment have it.

But there was little excitement. The afternoon wore on under the dome and most of the time was devoted to hearing Frank P. Walsh, Judge Ritter's attorney, make his lengthy defense with hardly a gesture or a pound on the desk. His voice, devoid of dramatic intonations, was carried through the chamber by a loud speaker, placed on the rostrum to prevent the Senators from going to sleep.

The trial will be filled with citations of facts and figures and on the whole promises to be a dull affair. I could not help thinking yesterday that were Judge Ritter better known how much more exciting the affair might be. When they tried and acquitted President Andrew Johnson the atmosphere was charged with political electricity and the crackling of oratorical static. And, too, the clothes of those present must have robbed the scene of its present business-like drabness.

• • • •

THE Senate has not put on such an air of dignity for a long time as it has these days. The Senators keep their seats and such conversation as they hold is in whispers. While the chamber is not filled, there is almost always a large number of sober-faced Senators behind their school desks. Senator King of Utah follows the verbiage the most closely, and yesterday when Attorney Walsh, the tall heavy-set and red-faced attorney for the defense, forgot an important name, King was able to supply it with a smile.

Walsh had been going on about Ritter and suddenly forgot the important name. He fumbled, cleared his throat, stopped, turned to Carl Hoffman, associate defense attorney, who hadn't been listening at all. Hoffman stuttered, got red in the face, and the galleries tittered. But the gallant gentleman from Utah who never misses a word said in the chamber, came to the rescue so that Mr. Walsh could keep going.

The prosecuting officers, all members of the House, sit at a table to the left of the Speaker. Across the chamber Judge Ritter sits at a similar table, nervously playing with a pencil. He is dressed in a double-breasted gray suit, very neat. His face, under a mop of curly gray hair, is sallow and he is the most serious-appearing man there. He wears spectacles. He is nervous.

• • • •

FACING him is Representative Summers, a bald, hawk-like man, whose low voice necessitated the installation of a microphone. When he was first escorted in the chamber with the Senate's crier singing "Oyez" and making the Senate over into a court, he could not make himself heard. Next to him is Representative Hobbs, a stout man with a double chin, who makes notes and confers with an associate. He looks very glum. Both he and Summers are Democrats. Their Republican associate, Representative Perkins, a tall man with a bald dome surrounded by brown, curly hair, sits apart from them, also taking notes.

And that is the set-up of what is an historical event. All of the other impeachment cases on record have long since been forgotten except that of the unschooled Johnson, who spent a lifetime in defense of the Constitution and then was impeached for violating it. Johnson, the rough and ready man from Tennessee with the cultured wife, was impeached by the House and tried in the Senate, where he escaped conviction by one vote.

A tall and tragic figure, Johnson sat where Judge Ritter sits today. The fight was bitter and long, and had one more Senator been against him he would have been removed from office. But the vote was 35 to 19, and it was enough to save him. The trial broke the man, whose life was almost all tragedy, and he went back to the Southland seeking vindication. The people sent him back to the Senate and there he arose one day and powerfully defended himself and his policies before the same body that had so nearly ousted him. A short while later he died.

The Larger Thunder

Paris Correspondent Sees Rhineland Crisis As Incidental To Fundamental Problem Of Germany's Ultimate Course In Europe.

By Andre Vulliet.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Paris.

THE spotlight of history has been focused so intensely on that piece of the Rhine and which serves as a buffer along the French and Belgian frontiers, that the question of war and peace in Europe—and possibly in the world—is now regarded by most people as hanging solely on the happy solution of the Franco-German problem. Yet, all the developments of the past few years seem to indicate that, in the long run, the problem will be much vaster and will come up in the form of a question between Germany and Europe.

Indeed, there exists a specific, historical Franco-German rivalry, the origin of which goes back to time immemorial. It is the antagonism of two forces which must have their say in European affairs. On one hand, Germany, now more united and superficially stronger than ever, seems ready for the fulfillment of her mission and the expansion of her destiny. On the other hand, France, accustomed for centuries to playing the leading role on the Continent and to dreading the German race, cannot willingly surrender her position as a great power. For it is the French feeling that giving a free hand in central and eastern Europe will, sooner or later, lead to the development of a "greater Germany," either in territory, population or influence.

This may take another 10, 15 or 25 years. But the French are convinced that at the end of that period the Franco-German antagonism will rise again, not only as a psychological or juridical issue, as it is now looked upon by the rest of the world, but as a factual problem. In other words, they are of the opinion that what is now regarded as a mere difference in philosophy or political manners is bound in a not too distant future to cause fresh fighting on the Continent.

• • • •

WHETHER the French are right or wrong is another question, but it appears that the same difference in political philosophy which separates them from the Germans may some day oppose the Germans and the Belians, the Germans and the Austrians, the Germans and the Czechs, or the Poles, or the Lithuanians or the Russians. All these may be issues in the making. Any of them may come up any time, as Germany's need for expansion has been stressed time and again by Reichsfuehrer Hitler and all German spokesmen.

German reapprochment.

"It is impossible to bar from its natural evolution a young people which is both prolific and restrained on its territory," Friedrich Sieburg, noted German author, pointed out a few days ago in a lecture given in Paris on the question of a Franco-German rapproachement.

Speaking on the subject of Germany's conception of right and wrong, Mr. Sieburg, one of the most active German propagandists in Paris, continued thus: "One cannot deny that the sense of 'right' is not the same in Germany as in France. There exists a German right which is in direct contradiction to all the efforts made during 15 years by the German Republic to adapt itself to the notion of right which was prevailing in Europe. But that 'right' was based on an unjust peace treaty.

"The Versailles Treaty was for the German people the origin of a moral crisis. Civilization had defeated them and civiliaztion had to bear the brunt of all the treaty evils. It was but natural that a form of German morality must necessarily replace the universal morality. We, Germans, have nationalized, for a certain time, the notion of morality which exists in every man's heart."

• • • •

AS TO the question of new treaties to be signed with Germany by any of her neighbors, Mr. Sieburg stressed that "no such treaty should recall that the signatories were enemies because a 'bona fide' pledge is binding toward a friend but not toward an enemy.

"All that which may look unpleasant in our notion of 'right' will be detrimental to the enemy only, never to the friend. With us, the notion of friendship surpasses that of treaties, while in France it is the contrary."

And dealing with the question of the revision of treaties, the lecturer emphasized: "The very fact that we consider ourselves in a permanent state of evolution ('ein ewiges werden') explains why we find it justified to denounce a treaty when it has become empty of its substance."

Chancellor Adolf Hitler is the leader of a people which has put all its mystical fervor in the "werden," the "becoming" or forging ahead, of a chosen race. That is why, in offering Europe 25 years of peace, that is, of a relative immobility, which sounds incompatible with Nazism's very philosophy, the Fuehrer has not succeeded in winning over all his neighbors.

• • • •

PEACE, of course, is not a state of indefinite sleep and comfort. For the past 15 years it has probably been one of the gravest mistakes of the French not to see it that way, to seek a permanent standstill and to indulge in the illusion that peace may be framed forever within the limits of contracts.

Such an illusion may have distorted the judgment of the French, notwithstanding their intelligence. They did not see the evolution of Germany, of Europe, of the rest of the world. They did not even admit an evolution within the League of Nations.

It seems that peace is necessarily a state of momentary equilibrium, guaranteed by honorable signatures and a pledged word which must be kept for a period which can not exceed the length of human foresight. It was the French mistake not to realize this.

BUT it is on the confidence resulting from such pledges, and on that alone, that further adjustments can be made to consolidate peace.

Even such a highly criticized treaty as the Versailles Treaty had its good points and to throw it to the dogs would be regrettable. It should not be forgotten that nations such as Poland or Czechoslovakia owe to it their very existence. Further, it liberated 32,000,000 Poles from their Russian or Prussian bondage and the minorities in Central Europe now number 10,000,000 as against more than 28,000,000 before the war.

"That adjustments should be made is beyond question. It seems safer, however, to do it slowly. Ten or 20 years may look like a long time for a dictatorial regime; in the history of Europe, it will be but an episode. Should Germany proceed with the policy of expediency which has marked its course during the past two or three years, she would pave the way for further disturbances and possible conflicts. Every Nation in Europe has a grudge of some sort against its neighbors and the "realpolitik" is sure to antagonize them all.

"Unless nations are to abandon all pretenses, are to organize alliances and to buy allies wherever they can be bought, are to prepare for war and strike when they think they have the advantage, a way must be found to restore some faith in the powers of treaties to bind those who would violate them and those who have sworn to enforce them." Such was the opinion expressed recently by Walter Lippmann, following Hitler's denouncing of the Locarno Treaty.

'For if in this crisis," the author continued, "the world does not regain some of its shattered faith in the pledges of governments, it will have to prepare itself with a sense of grim desolation for the disaster of European anarchy."

Curtis said the national committee inquired of C. B. Goodspeed, of Chicago, assistant national treasurer, and was informed that national committee funds were not beoing used in the Wisconsin primary.

Tells of Division.

But Goodspeed reported, Curtis said, that when the national finance committee started soliciting funds in Wisconsin some time ago, an arrangement was made for division of the money with the State committee, so that only one drive for funds would be made.

Goodspeed said the national committee retained five-sixteenths of the money collected, and the balance, eleven-sixteenths, was turned over to the State organization. He said it had been sent to Mrs. Thomas.

"We told Mrs. Thomas," he said, "that in our opinion money raised by the national committee or a State committee should not be spent for any candidate in a primary. We told her that our attitude in a primary should be neutral."

$3,000 Used for Slate.

Madison, Wis., April 6 (AP).—Edward J. Samp, chairman of the State Republican Committee, said today that although $3,000 was received from the Republican National Committee and used to aid the campaign of an uninstructed slate of delegates to the G. O. P. national convention, "not a cent of it was national committee funds."

"Every dollar was raised in Wisconsin," Samp said, referring to the $3,000. "A representative of the National Committee collected the money among Wisconsin Republicans and sent it to Washington where the National Committee collected its divvy out of it."

Samp said he felt the State Republican organization was entitled to the money.

Text of Supreme Court Decision in Securities Exchange Case

The portion of the majority opinion of the Supreme Court in the Securities Exchange Commission case which includes the court's warning against usurpation of power follows:

Affects No Public Rights.

In this proceeding, there being no adversary parties, the filing of the registration statement is in effect an ex parte application for a license to use the mails and the facilities of interstate commerce for the purposes recognized by the act. We are unable to see how any right of the general public can be affected by the withdrawal of such an application before it has gone into effect. Petitioner emphatically says that no steps had been taken looking to the issue of the securities, and this is not denied. So far as the record shows, there were no investors, existing or potential, to be affected. The conclusion seems inevitable that an abandonment of the application was of no concern to anyone except the registrant. The possibility of any other interest in the matter is so shadowy, so indefinite and equivocal that it must be put out of consideration as altogether unreal. Under these circumstances, the right of the registrant to withdraw his application would seem to be as absolute as the right of any person to withdraw an ungranted application for any other form of privilege in respect of which he is at the time alone concerned.

An additional reason why the action of the commission and of the court below cannot be sustained is that the commission itself had challenged the integrity of the registration statement and invited the registrant to show cause why its effectiveness should not be suspended. In the face of such an invitation, it is a strange conclusion that the registrant is powerless to elect to save himself the trouble and expense of a contest by withdrawing his application. Such a withdrawal accomplishes everything which a stop order would accomplish, as counsel for the commission expressly conceded at the bar. And, as the court below very properly recognized, a withdrawal of the registration statement "would end the effect of filing it and there is no authority under section 19 (b) to issue the commission subpena and it could not be enforced by order of the district court under section 22 (b)." 79 F. (2d) 619.

The action of the commission finds no support in right principle or in law. It is wholly unreasonable and arbitrary. It violates the cardinal precept upon which the constitutional safeguards of personal liberty ultimately rest—that this shall be a government of laws—because to the precise extent that the mere will of an official or an official body is permitted to take the place of allowable official discretion or to supplant the standing law as a rule of human conduct, the government ceases to be one of laws and becomes an autocracy. Against the threat of such a contingency the courts have always been vigilant, and, if they are to perform their constitutional duties in the future, must never cease to be vigilant, to detect and turn aside the danger at its beginning. The admonition of Mr. Justice Bradley in Boyd vs. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 635, should never be forgotten: "It may be that it is the obnoxious thing in its mildest and least repulsive form; but illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing in that way, namely, by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure . . . It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen, and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be obsta principiis."

Arbitrary Rule Antagonistic.

Arbitrary power and the rule of the Constitution cannot both exist. They are antagonistic and incompatible forces; and one or the other must of necessity perish whenever they are brought into conflict. To borrow the words of Mr. Justice Day—"there is no place in our Constitutional system for the exercise of arbitrary power." Garfield v. Goldsby, 211 U. S. 249, 262. To escape assumptions of such power on the part of the three primary departments of the Government, is not enough. Our institutions must be kept free from the appropriation of unauthorized power by lesser agencies as well. And if the various administrative bureaus and commissions, necessarily called and being called into existence by the increasing complexities of our modern business and political affairs, are permitted gradually to extend their powers by encroachments—even petty encroachments—upon the fundamental rights, privileges and immunities of the people, we shall in the end, while avoiding the fatal consequences of a supreme autocracy, become submerged by a multitude of minor invasions of personal rights, less destructive, but no less violative of Constitutional guaranties.

Third. The proceedings for a stop order having thus disappeared, manifestly it cannot serve as a basis for the order of the dsitrict court compelling petitioner to appear, give testimony, and produce his private books and papers for inspection by the commission. But the commission contends that the order may rest upon the general power to conduct investigations which it says is conferred by section 19 (b). The difficulty with that is that the investigation was undertaken for the declared and sole purpose of determining whether a stop order should issue. The first action taken by the commission was on May 20, four days before the registration was to become effective under the statute. The commission then, after averring that upon reasonable grounds it believed the registration statement was false in material facts, directed that stop-order proceedings be instituted against the statement. It never has averred or directed anything else. This action was followed by a notice containing like recitals of a more detailed character, and calling upon the registrant to appear and show cause why a stop order should not be issued suspending the effectiveness of the statement. It was uopn this direction and notice that all subsequent proceedings were had and upon which they must stand or fall. We do not interpret the order of the district court, the substance of which has already been stated, as resting upon a different view.

Investigation Purpose Specific.

Nothing appears in any of the proceedings taken by the commission to warrant the suggestion that the investigation was undertaken or would be carried on for any other purpose or to any different end than that specifically named. An official inquisition to compel disclosures of fact is not an end, but a means to an end; and it is a mere truism to say that the end must be a legitimate one to justify the means. The citizen, when interrogated about his private affairs, has a right before answering to know why the inquiry is made; and if the purpose disclosed is not a legitimate one, he may not be compelled to answer. Since here the only disclosed purpose for which the investigation was undertaken had ceased to be legitimate when the registrant rightfully withdrew his statement, the power of the commission to proceed with the inquiry necessarily came to an end. Dissociated from the only ground upon which the inquiry had been based, and no other being specified, further pursuit of the inquiry, obviously, would become what Mr. Justice Holmes characterized as "a fishing expedition • • • for the chance that something discreditable might turn up" (Ellis vs. Interstate Commerce Comm., 237 U. S. 434, 445)—an undertaking which uniformly has met with judicial condemnation. In re Pacific Ry. Comm., 32 Fed. 241, 250; Kilbourn vs. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 190, 192, 193, 195, 196; Boyd vs. United States, 116 U. S. 616; Harriman vs. Interstate Commerce Comm., 211 U. S. 407, 419; Federal Trade Comm. vs. American Tobacco Co., 264 U. S. 298, 307-307.

In re Pacific Railway Commission involved the power of a Congressional commission to investigate the private affairs, books and papers of officers and employes of certain corporations indebted to the Government. That commission called before it the president of one of these corporations, required the production of private books and papers for inspection, and submitted interrogatories which the witness declined to answer. Acting under the statute, the commission sought a preparatory order from the circuit court to compel the witness to answer the interrogatories. The court, consisting of Mr. Justice Field, Circuit Judge Sawyer and District Judge Sabin, denied the motion of the district attorney for the order and discharged the rule to show cause. Opinions were rendered seriatim, the principal one by Justice Field. The authority of the commission was definitely denied. That decision has frequently been cited and approved by this court. Judge Sawyer, in the course of his opinion (at p. 263), after observing that a bill in equity seeking a discovery upon general, loose and vague allegations is styled "a fishing bill," and will, at once, be dismissed on that ground (Story, Eq. Pl. section 325), said: "A general, offensive, inquisitorial, compulsory investigation, conducted by a commission without any allegations, upon no fixed principles, and governed by no rules of law, or of evidence, and no restrictions except its own will, or caprice, is unknown to our Constitution and laws; and such inquisition would be destructive of the rights of the citizen, and an intolerable tyranny. Let the power once be established, and there is no knowing where the practice under it would end."

The fear that some malefactor may go unwhipped of justice weighs as nothing against this just and strong condemnation of a practice so odious. And, indeed, the fear itself has little of substance upon which to rest. The Federal courts are open to the Government; and the grand jury abides as the appropriate constitutional medium for the preliminary investigation of crime and the presentment of the accused for trial.

The philosophy that constitutional limitations and legal restraints upon official action may be brushed aside upon the plea that good, perchance, may follow, finds no countenance in the American system of government. An investigation not based upon specified grounds is quite as objectionable as a search warrant not based upon specific statements of fact. Such an investigation, or such a search, is unlawful in its inception and cannot be made lawful by what it may bring, or by what it actually succeeds in bringing, to light. Cf. Byars vs. United States, 273 U. S. 28, 29, and cases cited. If the action here of the commission be upheld, it follows that production and inspection may be enforced not only of books and private papers of the guilty, but those of the innocent as well, notwithstanding the proceeding for registration, so far as the power of the commission is concerned, has been brought to an end by the complete and legal withdrawal of the registration statement.

Exercise of "such a power would be more pernicious to the innocent than useful to the public;" and approval of it must be denied, if there were no other reason for denial, because, like an unlawful search for evidence, it falls upon the innocent as well as upon the guilty and unjustly confounds the two. Entick vs. Carrington, 19 Howell's St. Trials, 1030, 1074—followed by this court in Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 629-630. No one can read these two great opinions, and the opinions in the Pacific Ry. Comm. case, from which the forfegoing quotation is made, without perceiving how closely allied in principle are the three protective rights of the individual—that against compulsory self-accusation, that against unlawful searches and seizures, and that against unlawful inquisitorial investigations. They were among those intolerable abuses of the Star Chamber, which brought that institution to an end at the hands of the Long Parliament in 1640. Even the shortest step in the direction of curtailing one of these rights must be halted in limine, lest it serve as a precedent for further advances in the same direction, or for wrongful invasions of the others.

Fourth. The foregoing disposes of the case and requires a reversal of the judgment of the lower court. In that view, it becomes unnecessary to consider the constitutional validity of the act.

Reversed.

Dissenting Decision.

The dissenting opinion of Justice Cardozo follows:

I am unable to concur in the opinion of the court.

A subpena duces tecum was issued by the commission on June 13 before any attempt had been made to withdraw the registration statement. On June 18, the day of the attempted withdrawal there was issued a second subpoena commanding the registrant to appear and testify, and this was served upon him by the marshal. Then and for months earlier a standing regulation gave warning to him and to the world that without the consent of the commission there could be no withdrawal of a statement once placed upon the files. I am persuaded that the rule is valid, that the commission had abundant reasons for maintaining jurisdiction and that notice of withdrawal did not nullify the writ:

The subpena flouted by the witness was issued under Section 19 (b) of the statute as well as under Section 8 (e). So the sworn petition for the commission expilicitly informs us. It was issued in aid of any legitimate inquiry that the commission had authority to initiate and prosecute by reason of a false and defective statement then part of the official records. Nothing in the case gives color to the argument that the witness was to be subjected to a roving examination without the restraints of pleadings or bounds analogous thereto. On the contrary, the order of the District Court upholding the subpena directs him to make answer to questions pertinent to the documents already filed with the commission, to these and nothing more. If the petitioner is to prevail in his attack upon the writ, it will have to be on broader grounds than those of form and method. He must be able to make good his argument that by the mere announcement of withdrawal, he achieved results analogous to those of a writ of prohibition.

Excuse Not Automatic.

Recklessness and deceit do not automatically excuse themselves by notice of repentance. Under section 24 of the act, there is the possibility, at times the likelihood, of penal liability. A statement wilfully false of wilfully defective is a penal offense to be visited, upon conviction, with fine or imprisonment. Under section 12, there is the possibility, if not the likelihood, of liability for damages. The statement now in question had been effective for over 20 days, and the witness did not couple his notice of withdrawal with an affidavit or even a declaration that securities had not been sold. Nor is the statute lacking in machinery with which to set these liabilities in motion upon appropriate occasion. Under section 19 (b), plenary authority is conferred on the commission to conduct all investigations believed to be necessary and proper for the enforcement of the act and of any of its provisions. There will be only partial attainment of the ends of public justice unless retribution for the past is added to prevention for the future. But the opinion of the court teaches us that however flagrant the offense and however laudable the purpose to uncover and repress it, investigations under section 19 (b) will be thwarted on the instant when once the statement of the registrant has been effectively withdrawn. If that is so, or even indeed if the effect of the retraction is to embarrass the inquiry—to cloud the power to continue—the fairness of the rule is proved out of the mouths of its accusers. If such consequences are inherent in a privilege of withdrawal indiscriminately bestowed, there is need of some restraint upon the power of the wrongdoer to mitigate the penalties attaching to his wrong. Shall the truth be shown forth or buried in the archives? The commission is to determine in the light of all the circumstances, including its information as to the conduct of the applicant, whether the public interest will be prompted by forgetting and forgiving. Bronx Brass Foundry, Inc., vs. Irving Trust Co., — U. S. —, February 10, 1936.

Objection Is Inadequate.

The objection is inadequate that an investigation directed to the discovery of a crime is one not for the commission, but for the prosecuting officer. There are times when the functions of the two will coincide or overlap. Congress has made it plain that any inquiry helpful in the enforcement of the statute may be pursued by the commission, though conduct punishable as a crime may thereby be uncovered. Indeed, the act is explicit (section 22 (c)) that a witness is not excused from testifying on the ground that the testimony required of him may tend to incriminate him or expose him to a penalty or forfeiture. He may however, claim his privilege, and if then compelled to testify, may not be prosecuted thereafter for any matter thus revealed. All this is far from providing that there can be no practical advantage in keeping the proceeding open. Aside from the possibility of civil liability, the offender may not choose to claim the privilege, and even if he does and is then excused from testifying, other witnesses may be available, for example, employes, who are not implicated in the offense and who can bring the facts to view. Moreover, amnesty for one offender may mean conviction for another, an associate in the crime. Inquiry by the commission is thus more penetrating and efficient than one by a grand jury where there is no statutory grant of amnesty to compel confederates to speak More important still, the enforcement of the act is aided when guilt is exposed to the censure of the world, though the witness in the act of speaking may make punishment impossible. It is no answer to all this that upon the record now presented a crime has not been proved or even definitely charged. An investigator is not expected to prove or charge at the beginning the offenses which he has reason to suspect will be uncovered at the end. The petition in behalf of the commission enumerates one by one the false statements and the omissions imputed to the registrant. Some at least are of such a nature that if chargeable to him at all, they can hardly have been made otherwise than with criminal intent. To give the investigating officer an opportunity to reach down into the hidden wells of knowledge and the more hidden wells of motive is the very purpose of the regulation by which the proceeding is kept open after the registrant has tried to end it.

Reminds of Dangers.

The opinion of the court reminds us of the dangers that wait upon the abuse of power by officialdom unchained. The warning is so fraught with truth that it can never be untimely. But timely too is the reminder, as a host of impoverished investors will be ready to attest, that there are dangers in untruths and half truths when certificates masquerading as securities pass current in the market. There are dangers in spreading belief that untruths and half truths, designed to be passed on for the guidance of confiding buyers, are to be ranked as piccadillos, or even perhaps as part of the amenities of business. When wrongs such as these have been committed or attempted, they must be dragged to light and pilloried. To permit an offending registrant to stifle an inquiry by precipitate retreat on the eve of his exposure is to give immunity to guilt; to encourage falsehood and evasion; to invite the cunning and unscrupulous to gamble with detection. If withdrawal without leave may check investigation before securities have been issued, it may do as much thereafter, unless indeed consistency be thrown to the winds, for by the teaching of the decision withdrawal without leave is equivalent to a stop order, with the result that forthwith there is nothing to investigate. The statute and its sanctions become the sport of clever knaves.

Appeal is vaguely made to some constitutional immunity, whether expressed or implied is not stated with distinctness. It cannot be an immunity from the unreasonable search or seizure of papers or effects: the books and documents of the witness are unaffected by the challenged order. It cannot be an immunity from impertinent intrusion into matters of strictly personal concern: the intimacies of private business lose their self-regarding quality after they have been spread upon official records to induce official action. In such circumstances the relevance of Entick vs. Carrington, 19 Howell's St. Trials, 1030, 1074, or Boyd vs. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 629, or the Matter of of the Pacific Railway Commission, 32 Fed. 241, 250, is not readily perceived. Cf. Interstate Commerce Commission vs. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 469, 478. If the immunity rests upon some express provision of the Constitution, the opinion of the court does not point us to the article or section. If its source is to be found in some impalpable essence, the spirit of the Constitution or the philosophy of government favored by the Fathers, one may take leave to deny that there is anything in that philosophy or spirit whereby the signer of a statement filed with a regulatory body to induce official action is protected against inquiry into his own purposes to deceive. The argument for immunity lays hold of strange analogies. A commission which is without coercive powers, which cannot arrest or amerce or imprison though a crime has been uncovered or even punish for contempt, but can only inquire and report, the propriety of every question in the course of the inquiry being subject to the supervision of the ordinary courts of justice, is likened with denunciatory fervor to the star chamber of the Stuarts. Historians may find hyperbole in the sanguinary simile.

The rule now assailed was wisely conceived and lawfully adopted to foil the plans of knaves intent upon obscuring or suppressing the knowledge of their knavery.

The witness was under a duty to respond to the subpena.

Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mrs. Justice Stone join in this opinion.

Supreme Court Gives Warning

minority opinion with which Justices Stone and Brandeis had concurred.

The majority of the court held that the act did not confer upon the commission an arbitrary power to deny without reason a motion to dismiss.

"We are unable to find any precedent for the assumption of such power by any administrative body," the court said.

It held that the right to dismissal of an action is unqualified unless the dismissal would legally prejudice the defendants in some other way than by future litigation of the same kind. The court pointed out that the Jones application for issuance of securities had not gone into effect, and it said it was unable to see how any right of the public could have been affected by its withdrawal. It held that such withdrawal accomplishes everything that a stop order by the commission would accomplish.

"The action of the commission finds no support in right principle or in law," the majority held. "It is wholly unreasonable and arbitrary. It violates the cardinal precept upon which constitutional safeguards of personal liberty ultimately rest—that this shall be a government of laws—because to the precise extent that the mere will of an official or an official body is permitted to take the place of allowable official discretion or to supplant the standing law as a rule of human conduct, the government ceases to be one of laws and becomes an autocracy. Against the threat of such a contingency the courts have always been vigilant and if they are to perform their constitutional duties in the future must never cease to be vigilant to detect and turn aside the danger at its beginning."

Has Right to Know Why.

The court pointed out that an official inquisition to compel disclosure of facts is not an end, but a means to an end, and that it is a truism that the end must be a legitimate one to justify the means. It pointed out that a citizens before being interrogated about his private affairs has a right to know why an inquiry is being made.

The majority opinion condemned "roving, offensive, inquisitorial, compulsory" investigation.

"The fear that some malefactor may go unwhipped of justice weighs as nothing against this just and strong condemnation of a practice so odious," the court said. "The Federal courts are open to the Government, and the grand jury abides as an appropriate constitutional medium for the preliminary investigation of crimes and the presentment of the accused for trial."

The philosophy that contitutional limitations may be brushed aside on the plea that good may follow has no place in the American system of Government, the court said.

The court said that an investigation not based upon specific grounds is quite as objectionable as a search warrant not based upon specific facts.

Listing as the three protective rights of the individual that against compulsory self-accusaiton, that against unlawful searches and seizures, and that against unlawful inquisitorial investigations, the Justices said:

"Even the shortest step in the direction of curtailing one of these rights must be halted in limine, lest it serve as a precedent for further advances in the same direction, or for wrongful invasion of the others."

Justice Cardozo took the stand that "nothing in the case gives color to the argument that the witness was to be subjected to a roving examination without the restraints of pleadings or bounds analogous thereto."

"Reclessness and deceit do not automatically excuse themselves by notice of repentence," he said. ". . . There will be only partial attainment of the ends of public justice unless retribution for the past is added to prevention for the future."

"Shall the truth be forever buried in the archives?" he asked.

Immunity Appeal Vague.

"Appeal is vaguely made to some constitutional immunity, whether express or implied is not stated with distinctness. It can not be immunity from the unreasonable search or seizure of papers or effects; the books and documents of the witness are unaffected by the challenged order. It cannot be imunity from impertinent intrusion into matters of strictly personal concern: the intimacies of private business lose their self-regarding quality after they have been spread upon official records to induce official action. If the immunity rests upon some express provision of the Constitution, the opinion of the court does not point us to the article or section."

Commenting on the decision, James M. Landis, chairman of the SEC, said that the commission had hoped the case would prove fit vehicle for determination of the constitutionality of the act.

Bill for Agency In Mississippi Valley Scored

War Department Asserts Board Would Duplicate Own Activities.

By the Associated Press.

The War Department yesterday registered opposition to the Norris bill to set up a Mississippi Valley Authority to carry out flood control, irrigation, navigation and power projects in the vast Mississippi basin.

Secretary Dern, in a letter to the Senate Agriculture Committee, said the bill, introduced by Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, gave too much authority to a single independent agency over widely different activities and would result in waste and loss of efficiency.

Two other Federal agencies, the Agriculture Department and the Federal Power Commission, said the bill would duplicate and conflict with activities of their own.

After these communications were placed in the record of an agriculture sub-committee, the private utility industry, through Charles W. Kellogg, chairman of the Engineers Public Service Co., entered a protest against the measure on the ground it held even greater threats to power interests than the Tennessee Valley Authority, which Norris also sponsored.

Reduction in Control.

Dern said the proposed MVA, a corporation of three members, "with broad powers to carry out large and varied public improvements at enormous cost over an extensive territory embracing almost three-fourths of the United States, would function in the field of diminishing returns, and thus reduce the degree of control now maintained, with the inevitable result of waste, increased overhead and loss of efficiency in execution.

"The most efficient results can be obtained from such an agency only when the kinds of work it has to do are of the same general type, or at least closely allied in character," he added.

M. L. Wilson, as acting Secretary of Agriculture, in his letter cautioned against a "duplication" of governmental activities that "might result in curtailment, or discontinuance" of work in fields now controlled by that department.

Called Inconsistent.

Frank R. McNinch, chairman of the power commission, said two sections of the bill authorizing the corporation to construct dams, reservoirs and power houses seemed "inconsistent with the policy and provisions of the Federal power act for national planning and development through a determination that 'each project' adopted is 'adapted' to a comprehensive plan of water power development."

Kellogg, who said he spoke without compensation for 894 private utility companies in the Mississippi Basin with a a capital investment of $5,000,000,000 and serving 11,000,000 customers, contended the MVA bill would set up "ruinous competition" with private power companies.

Reporter Defies Data Demands Of House Group

Military Committee Asks Source of Story; Counsel Denies Its Right.

By the Associated Press.

The authority of the House Military Committee to elicit information from a newspaper reporter regarding the background of a story was challenged yesterday by Elisha Hanson, counsel for Frank C. Waldrop, writer for the Hearst newspapers.

Chairman McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, and other committee members unsuccessfully attempted to obtain information from Waldrop concerning a story he wrote referring to the case of Robert J. Byers and George Krieger, now under indictment for conspiracy to defraud the Government in the sale of surplus War Department goods.

"Upon the advice of counsel, I must decline to answer," Waldrop replied to scores of questions put by committee members.

In a prepared statement Hanson told the committee he had given this advice "for the simple reason this committee is not a court and can neither try Mr. Waldrop, nor itself."

Hanson said he fully recognized "the right of any Congressional committee to carry on an investigation in the aid of legislation." He added:

"I do not recognize the right of any Congressional committee, however, to summon a newspaper reporter here to examine him upon facts concerning the committee's own activities where the record, as in this case, shows that the committee was not interested in legislation but merely in persuading a Secretary of War to do something which the majority of the committee felt should be done by him in his ministerial capacity."

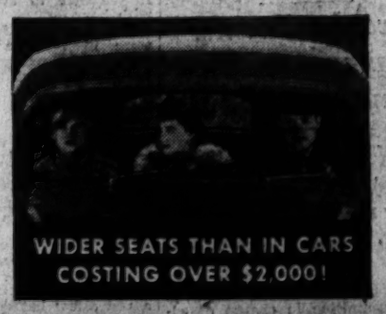
MORE ROOM
than in cars costing twice as much!

Nash "400" and LaFayette are great big SIX-PASSENGER cars with wider seats and more headroom and legroom than you'll find in all but one or two of the most expensive cars!



Car illustrated is DeLuxe Nash "400" four-door sedan with trunk

The minute you get inside a Nash "400" or LaFayette you can see, without taking measurements, how MUCH more room they give you! Three big people—even six-footers—ride in either seat with room to spare. And there's more headroom and legroom than you'll find in most cars costing two and three times as much!

Why put up with the limitations of a small car . . . why pay a higher price . . . when these lowest-priced Nash-built cars give you so much more for your money? More room; larger, double-acting hydraulic brakes in relation to car weight; the world's first completely seamless all-steel body; and many vital features of engineering never before offered in a car costing less than $1,500.00!

Mrs. Robert's Noted Horse Gives Party

'St. John Baptist' Honored By 4-Legged Friends On Birthday.

Canines Bring Owners to Noisy Function; 'Hamlet' Present.

"St. John the Baptist" famous horse, is "feeling his oats" today, pleased by the fact a year added to his age made occasion for a birthday party. The function was given for him by his owner, Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert, wife of the former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and was attended by a distinguished company of dogs who brought their owners with them.

All of the dogs were well behaved. Their conversation was somewhat noisy, in the opinion of St. John, who never barks, but he was glad to hear them having a good time. He had one horse friend there also, "Easter Sunday," the mare owned by Mr. Moran McConihe, who has appeared with him in horse shows and who received with him yesterday. Both wore their usual fur coats, lighter in weight than those in which they appeared in mid-winter, but equally smart. St. John looked particularly distinguished because of his white face and four white legs, and the white lei he wore about his neck.

A feature of the occasion was the music provided by Sidney of orchestra fame who came out with one of the members of his orchestra and played "Happy Birthday" and "Barney Google," both of which St. John applauded by pawing and nodding his head.

For the entertainment of the canine guests, their host and his owner had planned a contest with Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mrs. Campbell Pritchett and Mrs. Bowler Hull as judges.

Hamlet, the Great Dane owned by Mrs. Forbes Morgan, who recently was on trial charged with being a vicious dog, was among the guests and, although he was not given the prize for the best-behaved dog, his behavior was considered above reproach.

The prize in this class was a cat's head which meowed when squeezed.

Martha Blair's puppy, "Wally" received a big, woolly cat as the prize for being the cutest dog and Mr. Henri de Sibour's black spaniel, Toby, a stocking full of dog biscuits for being the most beautiful. "Teddy," the ruffy chow, belonging to Dr. Guillermo Patterson, the Ambassador of Cuba, was awarded a ball with a bell in it for being the best-groomed dog at the party.

Mrs. Robert's father, Mr. Harold Walker, was one of the persons who attended the affair, having come all the way from New York to be present.

The middle of the month "St. John" go with his owner to Atlanta for several weeks stay.

Society Throngs To Candlelight Music Program

Concert Is Last of Season; But Group Plans a Spring Festival.

Threatening skies did not keep Washington music lovers from attending the closing candlelight concert sponsored by the Washington Chamber Music Society yesterday afternoon at Phillips Memorial Gallery.

Ever since their organization two years ago in the Georgetown home of Mrs. Jouett Shouse, these concerts have proved increasingly popular among members of Capital society. Yesterday the room in which they were held at the gallery was filled to capacity by persons who enjoy the music in a setting of fine paintings and soft candlelight.

As its final offering for the season, the orchestra yesterday played Schubert's Quartet movement in C minor, Wolf's Italian Serenade, Mozart's Quartet in F major, with Harold Gomberg as oboe soloist, and Debussy's Quartet in G minor.

Members of the society are planning a spring festival, to be held late in May, at which the Pro-Musica Quartet will present a series of chamber music concerts. It is expected the festival will be in the Georgetown garden of one of the members.

Among those active in working for the success of the series who were present yesterday were Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Nash, Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, Mrs. L. Corrin Strong and Mrs. John Fahey, wife of the chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, with her daughter, Miss Eleanor Fahey.

Others who attended were Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mrs. Louis Caldwell, Mrs. Charles Darlington, Mrs. Vernon Kellogg, Mrs. Donald Hiss, Mrs. Joseph Cotton, jr., Maj. Julia Stimson, the Misses Margaret and Lena Conrad, of Boston, who are spending the spring in Washington; Mrs. Maxfield Dunlop and Mrs. Thomas Burke.

Although with the closing strains of Debussy's quartet, the candlelight concert came to a close, the Memorial Gallery will continue to be the scene of social activities for several weeks to come. On April 15 the editor of the poetry magazine Voices, Mr. Harold Vinal, assisted by Miss Katherine Carrison Chapin, will hold a poetry recital there for the benefit of the magazine.

Cynthia Jump Will Be Bride

Boston Girl to Marry Dr. H. C. Willett, Son of Washington Man.

Mrs. Herbert A. Jump, of Boston and Nantucket, Mass., announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Cynthia Jump, to Dr. Hurd C. Willett, of Boston, son of Dr. Albert Willett and the late Mrs. Mabel Hurd Willett, of Washington.

Miss Jump was graduated last June from Mount Holyoke College, where she was editor of the Mount Holyoke News. Her father was pastor of the Union Congregational Church in Boston.

Dr. Willett is associate professor of meterology at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He was graduated from Princeton in 1924 and received his Ph. D. degree from George Washington University in 1927. He also studied at the University of Bergen, Norway. He was at one time connected with the Weather Bureau in Washington.

Gawler-Trunnell Wedding Is June 6

Mrs. Elizabeth Giogannetti Fetes Bride-to-Be.

Miss Dorothy Gawler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Gawler, has chosen June 6 as the date of her marriage to Mr. Kenneth Trunnell, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Trunnell, of Washington.

On Saturday Miss Gawler was the guest of honor at a shower given by Mrs. Elizabeth Giogannetti at her home in Newark street. The drawing room was decorated with flowers and candles carrying out the color scheme of green and white.

The guests included Miss Fay Callahan, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Danilson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee Donnelly, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Gawler, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gawler, Mr. and Mrs. A. Gawler, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ghiselli, Mrs. Grace Holtzclaw, Mr. Arthur John, Miss Katherine Lewis, Mr. William Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Ross Snyder, Miss Dorothy Snyder, Mr. Kenneth Trunnell, Mr. Clyde Ross and Miss Margaret Doyle.

Miss Richards Gives Luncheon After Lecture

Mrs. Wallace Honor Guest At Informal Event in Sulgrave Club.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Miss Janet Richards entertained a small group of friends at luncheon at the Sulgrave Club yesterday afternoon following her lecture there, with Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, as guest of honor.

The party was quite informal, a gathering where friends sat next each other and talked over the activities of the Easter season. Mrs. George Barnett, who recently has returned from Florida, was seated next Mrs. Charles M. Lea, of Philadelphia, who has been spending the winter here, as she does each year. Mrs. Lea is expecting as her guests on Friday, Capt. and Mrs. Harry Lance, of Norfolk, England, and will entertain for them at dinner Monday night. Mrs. Barnett also is having a guest, Miss Leonora Curtain, of Pasadena and Santa Fe, whom she expects to arrive Easter to spend some time with her.

Mrs. Lea and Mrs. Barnett both were in black as were several others, who preferred dark colors to gay ones with April showers imminent. Mrs. Lea's gown had a thread of gold through it and she wore at the neck an ornament, which was the object of interested comment. It was formed of small gold filigree discs, which were antique watch guards, all different in design.

Mrs. Wallace in Black.

Mrs. Wallace wore a small blue straw hat, a black suit, yellow blouse and a gardenia in her lapel. Mrs. Parker West also wore black, a red straw hat and red bag providing a bright touch. Mrs. Mark Bristol wore a green velvet ascot and had green coq feathers on her hat, adding color to her black outfit. Admiral and Mrs. Bristol will have as their guest on April 17, Mrs. Irving H. Chase, of Waterbury, Conn., who is returning from Palm Beach, where she had a house for the winter.

Mrs. Golden W. Bell and Mrs. Charles McNary both wore brown. Mrs. Bell, whose name offers temptation for entertaining play on words, told of Mr. Justice Harlan Fiske Stone's asking her husband whether the "W" stood for "wedding," making the name Golden Wedding Bell, and the Attorney General, Mr. Homer Cummings, interpreting it as "Golden West Bell."

During the luncheon Miss Richards looked down the long table and asked her guests, one by one, whether they remembered the title of the book she had reviewed in the morning. Not everyone could answer "yes," for the lecture itself was more important to them than the book to which she referred. "I want you all to read that book, 'Inside Europe,'" she said.

Ship Naming Explained.

Miss Richards also entertained the company with a story few of the guests had heard, about the naming of the ship Queen Mary. All of the ships of the Cunard Line, she said, have had names ending in "ia." With this in mind, the name of Queen Victoria was selected and a representative of the line asked the late King George for his "gracious" permission to use the name of the great queen "in christening the new liner. King George replied he was certain Queen Mary would be much pleased. The Cunard representative was too embarrassed to explain it was Queen Victoria to whom he referred, and the ship was named the Queen Mary. Not only was the name of the boat changed, but the 'Victoria' on all the linens and silver had to be changed also.

Noted Woman Pioneer Now Seeks War's End

Miss Anne Martin, Former Suffrage Leader, Talks of Changing Trend in Accomplishing Aims as Influence Grows.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

SINCE THE DAYS when the Grimke sisters joined the anti-slavery movement, on through the years when feminists fought, picketed and protested for suffrage, the "Woman With a Cause" has come in for a lot of comment—favorable and otherwise.

But without heeding hecklers, without bothering about "what people will say," women leaders have forged on toward seemingly impossible goals, each time eventually gaining what the majority of women wanted. First, it was abolishment of slaves. Then suffrage. Now their goal is peace.

Miss Anne Martin, an outstanding worker in the woman's movement for more than two decades, has been actively interested in some "cause" since 1911, when she began organizing the campaign that won woman suffrage for Nevada in 1914. Later, she was active in the national suffrage fight, and still later, she took to the political stump and was the first woman candidate for the United States Senate.

In recent years, however, as Western regional director of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, she has been concerned with what she terms "the greatest of all causes I have yet worked for."

Seeking to End Wars.

A member of the committee of the People's Mandate to Governments to End War, she has been conducting a campaign for this in Colorado, where she obtained thousands of signatures.

Now in Washington, Miss Martin yesterday told something of the work she is doing and also compared methods women campaigners use now with methods employed in the past.

"We do things differently these days," she said. "We work with a consciousness of political power. We send deputations to Congress and to the White House; we talk and write directly to Congressmen; we explain our cause to individuals and to audiences, both from the platform and over the radio.

"Back in 1914, we had no political status. We had to talk from the platform or work through men, by what we called 'indirect influence.' Of course that was just another name for sex appeal," she said, a merry gleam in her eyes. "Today, some women resort to the old method advantageously," she went on, still smiling, "but direct influence, by ways I've already mentioned, is probably more dependable."

She further explained the most outstanding workers for causes in the past were good orators. "But the picture has changed. Today public speaking, the dramatic method of presentation, is still used; but the strictly political system of conferring directly with lawmakers is less exhausting and more effective."

50,000,000 Signers Is Aim.

Members of the People's Mandate to Governments to End War, she said, intend to do their talking to the tune of a petition expressing such overwhelming opposition to war that governments will not dare to resort to it. "We hope to get 50,000,000 names on the list eventually," said Miss Martin. "But we won't wait until we get that many to make use of signatures we have already obtained," she continued. "These are being employed now to prove to legislators, to national leaders everywhere, that peace must be permanent."

She emphasized repeatedly, "This is not exclusively a woman's fight—though women as the producers of human life are generally eager to preserve peace. This is a 'cause' for all women and all men.

"Men who are pacifists are sometimes subjected to criticism on the score they are afraid of war. For this reason it is chivalrous of women to lead the way, to make it easy for men to follow without leaving the impression they are cowardly."

The fight for peace is particularly difficult, she said, because so many "psychological barriers" of this type must be battered down. "Not only is there a widespread feeling that male pacifists are afraid of war, but there is the common conviction that war is inevitable, and the belief that human nature cannot be changed," she averred. "Gradually people are being educated to the opinion it is braver to stand for peace than to be pushed into war. They are realizing, too, that war can always be averted; and that, as Jane Addams expressed it, 'It may not be possible to change human nature, but human behavior can be improved.'"

Director Plans To Build Plump Dancers by Diet

Will Seek to Appease Public Taste for More Heft in Girls of Ensemble.

By the United Press.

HOLLYWOOD.—Plump, healthy dancing girls are the kind the public wants, and he's going to grow 'em that way, Bobby Connolly, dance director, announces.

He put his troupe on a strengthening, fattening diet, which includes a teaspoonful of cod liver oil daily.

Connolly isn't going to change his policy of using small girls for his dance routine. None of his dancers will be over 5 feet 2 inches, but they must weigh at least 135 pounds.

Here is the Connolly diet, and if the girls don't follow it, they will be discharged:

Breakfast—Glass of fruit juice, two eggs, two slices of bacon, one slice of buttered toast.

Between breakfast and lunch—Glass of orange juice.

Lunch—Pint of milk, salad, two rolls and butter, ice cream.

Afternoon tea—Glass of orange juice and teaspoonful of cod liver oil.

Dinner—Cream soup, salad, two lamb chops, rare steak or roast beef, fish or chicken, two medium-sized potatoes, two vegetables, one roll and sherbert.

Connolly, who contends dancers work harder than laborers, says this diet includes everything a normal, healthy girl should eat when she is working hard.

Weight of Children Affected by Housing

Study Shows Those Outside Crowded Zones Heavier.

Good housing conditions have a direct favorable affect on the height and weight of school children, according to a study made in Manchester, England, and described in the current issue of the U. S. Monthly Labor Review. Three groups of children were studied: a group that moved out of the congested city area to less crowded suburbs, a group that had lived in the suburbs for some time, and a third group that remained in the city area. Those who had lived longest in less crowded conditions were both the heavier and the taller, while those that remained in the city were both the lighter and the shorter. Comparing children aged 10 years, it was found that suburban children had the advantage of approximately 3 inches in height and from 5 to 10 pounds in weight over city-reared children.

Mignon Finds New Nail Polish, Easy to Apply and Resists Wear

Mignon, who writes this column, does not sell, indorse or manufacture any cosmetics.

By Mignon.

IN FLORIDA I discovered a nail polish that comes in a small jar and is a very thick cream. Not oily, but soft enough to cling to your finger when you run it across the top and soft enough to cling to the buffer if you dip the end of it into the jar. It takes little effort to buff the cream into a high polish, which is natural looking and colorless.

The cream itself has a raspberry tint, but it doesn't seem to color

The trick about it that impressed me and brought me to the decision that I am going to use it all through the summer is this: After you have used it a few times you will find that you won't need to apply it more than once a week. After washing the nails and scrubbing them with a hand brush, all you have to do is rub the towel (preferably a rough one) over the nails a couple of times, as you would the buffer, and they glow again.

I have brittle nails anyway and I have found it difficult to get just the right polish. If your nails are dry naturally there are many products that make them more brittle, and I've noticed that on a certain type of fingernail, liquid polishes, the favorite of so many, crack after they are dry and leave the nails anything but lovely.

Of course, if women could be made to use a good nail cream regularly it wouldn't make any difference what kind of polish they used. But time seems to be scarce, and all women want the short cuts to beauty. If the liquid polish agrees with your nails and you like it, it is quick, and I can see no objection to it. But if you have dry nails and won't bother to use nail cream regularly, try this polish about which I am so very enthusiastic. My guess is that you will fall completely in love with it.

After you have used it a while it may look a bit dry, but it never gets too dry to leave plenty on the fingertip for a good bright shine. Don't plaster it on like you do massage cream. It is not that kind of a product. Just use a wee bit of it, and repeat until you have a fine glow on the nails. Three times a week the first week, then twice, and after that you won't need it more than once a week. That was my experience. It isn't expensive and lasts forever.

Aping Indian Walk Makes Ankle Boxy

Margery Wilson Sees Harm in New Method.

American women are developing boxy ankles and large calves by trying to walk like Indians, the method taught by "physical culture" teachers in public schools, believes Margery Wilson, charm expert. "The American woman's international reputation for having the most beautiful legs in the world is suffering through the mistaken idea that walking flatfooted like an Indian, is the ideal of grace," says Miss Wilson. "We don't do anything else the Indians did, so why should we try to walk like them? Woman's feet generally are too much in her way. Most of the time they seem to be up around her neck, choking her."

Illness Is Often The Result of Upset Emotions

Playful Nerves Can Imitate Most Disease Symptoms; Fear Worst Cause.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THERE is scarcely any limit to the power of emotions over the physical behavior of the body. In fact, there are but few symptoms of disease that cannot be imitated by playful nerves. Few of us realize how completely we are under the control of the sympathetic nervous system which governs breathing, movements of the intestines, and many other body functions.

By the same token any one who is seeking the cause of some gastrointestinal upset—along with other possible causes—should explore the emotions. There are numerous citations in the older literature to diarrhea of nervous origin.

May Tax Body Resistance.

Without question fear is the most devastating of all human emotions, and it is only when we possess a sense of reasonable security—not neglecting precautions—that we function normally. Fear of father, mother, husband, or wife; fear for their safety or their comfort; fear of physical violence or of one's life may become a veritable obsession. It makes little difference whether it is justified or not—the damage to the individual is as great.

In the same manner we can fear disease—cancer, kidney disease, brain disease, or insanity—and because of these morbid ideas body resistance may be taxed to the point of disaster. Sleep is lost, digestion is interferred with, absorption fails and nerves are frazzled.

There is related an allegory of a Hindu who encountered the plague demon of cholera on his way to Bombay. After greeting the spirit the citizen inquired: "What are you about to do?" The reply was: "I shall enter the city and kill 3,000 people." Some weeks later the same wayfarer again encountered the demon returning to his lair and chided him with the fact that instead of 3,000 he had killed 30,000. "Ah," replied the demon, "it is true 30,000 died. I killed 3,000; fear killed the rest."

Lose Absorbing Power.

The relation of neuroses to colon disease has long been known, and Hurst, Alvarez and others have described accurately many of these cases. If the condition continues the bowel sooner or later loses its absorbing power and food as well as function is lost. The individual declines in weight and resistance and becomes an easy prey to infection.

It requires fine discrimination to differentiate disease of emotional origin from that brought on by infection. It is easy to understand how a patient with a nervous diarrhea may later exhibit the symptoms of intestinal disease due to failure of vitamin absorption and the loss of calcium and other needed salts. In fact, acidosis may well result in certain cases because this condition has continued over a period of weeks or months, depleting the body of needed salts.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

SPRING FEVER is not this lady's ailment. She has just the opposite complaint—an over-supply of spring energy. Comes the first balmy day of April and she gets the yen to buy yards and yards of new materials for curtains and bedspreads and slip covers and anything else she can think of. And she whizzes them in and out of her sewing machine at a great rate . . . having a perfectly swell time about it, we might add.

Right now she'd like to know what kind of slip covers to go with the draperies she's making of bright green and white leaf patterned chintz. The wall paper is yellow and the rug is a texture weave green . . . the winter covers for the furniture are rust, but she wants something gayer for summer covers.

Well—why not have one chair of the same green and white she's having at the windows, then two chairs in coral color and a third in brown with a frivolous yellow pleated flounce. Or she could have them all done in bittersweet in a herringbone weave or in a homespun material . . . with brown welting. Still another idea if she'd like to be different daring red would be to have all the furniture in washable white with great big red polka dots.

SUBSTITUTE SWEETHEART

By Priscilla Wayne

Ruth Dayton, 18, an orphan, wholesomely beautiful, has been hired to impersonate June Bradley, whom she greatly resembles. As first explained by June's uncle and aunt, Joseph and Clara Bradley, her mission is one of mercy—to comfort a dying man, June's stepbrother, Jim Bradley. June, she is told, is very ill and, therefore cannot come to her brother. However, Jim does not seem to be dying—though he has been badly hurt and blinded in an auto accident. Ruth, knowing she is falling in love with Jom, wants to quit her bargain only to find the Bradleys bound she shall continue to play her part.

Jim confides to Ruth that he suspects the auto accident that injured him was deliberate. Joe Bradley eavesdrops and later flies into a rage when Ruth will not tell him all Jim has said.

Chapter Five.

JOSEPH BRADLEY'S ordinarily calm, impressive face had changed in that one instant to the face of a fury. His shaggy brows seemed fairly to bristle. His lids were narrowed slits, through which his eyes blazed wildly, like the eyes of a madman.

"Joe, Joe," his wife pleaded, tugging at his arm. "Control yourself. This isn't the time or the place—what will June think? What will she think?"

Ruth crouched in very terror away from her captor, but his grip on her arm was like steel.

His wife's plea, however, had almost immediate effect. With a half muttered oath he pushed the girl away, stood glowering over her for an instant when she sank back, exhausted with fear and emotion, into her chair. Then, without another word he turned abruptly and left the room.

Friendly.

Mrs. Bradley was quickly talkative and friendly. She fluttered about Ruth. She examined the girl's bruised wrist where the strong-as-steel fingers of the angry man had left welts.

"That's too bad. It's just too bad. I wouldn't have had it happen for worlds. My dear, you're not to cry. I know you were frightened. And who wouldn't be?

"But Joseph is really a very kind man once you get to know him. Why, he wouldn't hurt a kitten. He's not very well, you know, and sometimes he gets these spells on him and he's like a tiger.

"He doesn't mean anything. It's just clashing nerves. Immediately afterward he's sorry and then he's as tame as a kitten for days. Now probably if you'd stay here weeks that couldn't happen again."

It won't happen again," Ruth said with positive determination, and she dried her eyes resolutely.

Clara fluttered around her solicitously. "What do you mean, dear? What do you mean? Oh, of course, I know that you were frightened. But it won't happen again."

Ruth's hand was on her own door. Mrs. Bradley's suite opened directly into the girl's suite of rooms. "No, Mrs. Bradley, I agree that it won't happen again."

"What do you mean?" Terror blazed from the older woman's eyes, terror trembled in her voice.

"Because I'm going away. Right now. I wouldn't stay here another hour, not for anything."

"You've been paid a week in advance," Mrs. Bradley reminded.

"I don't care about that. I'm going. I wouldn't stay here—not for any amount of money after what I've just seen. I'd be afraid of my life.

"Mr. Bradley is a madman! No person could act as he did a minute ago and be sane. And I'll not be a party to the deception of Jim Bradley any longer. I'm going away. Right now. I'll pack my bags this minute."

"Wait." It was Clara Bradley's turn now for anger. Her anger was more devastating, more fear inspiring, than the anger of her husband because it was quieter, more intense. Her hands trembled ever so slightly. That was the only outward index of her emotion. "Wait a minute. Think twice."

"I intend leaving right now."

"You intend nothing of the sort. I've apologized for Mr. Bradley's lack of courtesy. I'll apologize no more. You have been hired to do a specific work. You're staying right here to do it. I'll take not another word from you."

"And if I don't stay?"

"You'll stay!"—there was more than a threat in the words—"and if you don't stay peacefully, you'll regret it—exceedingly. Go into your room now and get to bed. Better try to get some sleep. You'll need all your strength tomorrow. And let me give you a little advice, my dear."

"Yes,"

"My advice to you, my dear girl, is that you make no outcries and that you refrain from trying any heroic escapes. In spite of anything you may seek to do, you're staying. Why make any fuss about it?

"If you are quiet and obedient and stay right here doing what you've been hired to do, you're perfectly safe. But I warn you, if you start trying to break your contract and to go away—well, I'm not saying, anything may happen."

Without an answering word Ruth left the room. Shut herself in her own luxurious suite.

Locking her door against disturbance, she packed her few personal belongings swiftly. Dressed herself in the clothing she had worn that morning. Left in the closet all of the other purchases lavished upon her by Mrs. Bradley.

Her plan was very simple. Get ready. Call a taxi. Watch until it arrived. Then walk straight down stairs and into the taxi.

She went over to the tiny, hand carved desk by the window, chose stationery and pen and wrote a brief note.

"Mrs. Bradley: I am leaving at once. In case you feel that I have not carried out my agreement I am leaving the money Mr. Bradley gave me yesterday in Des Moines.

"The clothes I am wearing away, which were purchased by you, will be returned as soon as I reach my own home and my own clothes again. RUTH DAYTON."

It was hard to think of leaving Jim Bradley. Even in the two brief visits she had made at his bedside, the sick man had attracted her strongly. She wondered what he would say in the morning when he found she had gone.

The Bradleys would be obliged to explain to him why his sister had not come to him in his dire illness. After all, it wasn't such a startling reason. Thousands of people have scarlet fever every year. It would have been very easy. It seemed to her now, to explain that very simply to the sick man in the first place.

Dead Line.

And the adventure of getting away that she now embarked upon, which on other occasions would have been merely leaving one place to go to another, now took on the semblance of an escape from something.

From what? Ruth looked at her bruised wrist, felt it gingerly. Sight of that wrist made fear tangible enough, certainly.

She crossed the room quickly. Found the telephone book hidden away in its elegant casing of handtooled leather, located the telephone number of the taxi company.

Then, sitting by the telephone she took the receiver from its hook prepared to dial the number. But no reassuring hum of a live telephone greeted her ears.

The telephone was dead.

Trembling, Ruth put the receiver upon the hook, crossed quickly over to the window. The room was three stories up from the street level at that side of the house and around the window ornamental wrought iron railing effectively barred any escape in that direction.

Determined, Ruth crossed back again to the door. There was only one way to accomplish escape. That was to walk boldly out of her door, down the stairway and out into the street just as she would have done had the taxi waited reassuringly below.

She opened her door, turned swiftly to take the shortest corridor to the stairway—and then shrank back. Joseph Bradley sauntered nonchalantly out of the door of the room next hers. Faced her in astonishment. She stopped abruptly.

"Going some place?"

She turned, would have run in the other direction, but his swift arm stopped her. "Want another bruised wrist?"

"No."

"Then get back into your room."

He followed her into the room, closed the door, faced her with determination.

"Let us get this straight. I hate to see a smart girl like you make a fool of herself. You're staying right here. Understand? In the first place, there isn't any possible chance of your getting away. In the second place, you'll only be in trouble—serious trouble, if you try. Think over what I've said. I think you'll take my advice."

He turned on his heel abruptly, left the room, closing the door after him.

In horror, Ruth heard a key turn in the lock, knew that she was held, a virtual prisoner, in Jim Bradley's palatial home.

MARY HAWORTH Says:

Professional Woman, Even More Than Home Girl, Regards Homemaking as Idyllic Occupation.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I admire your ability to conciliate subjective sentiment with objective action. My search is for a more abundant life. I am not an idealist and I believe my problem is reflected in the lives of many others. Through diligence and lack of adversity I have at 30 acquired a doctor's degree and a good professional position. I have worked out a program of social security for my life expectancy and have developed several avocations for use in later years.

Mary Haworth.

* * * *

I have no difficulty in making or keeping friends, but now the appropriate time seems to have arrived for me to choose a suitable life partner. None of my girl friends seem to meet the requirements, so I have decided to look elsewhere—but where? I do not care for the society girl type, yet want a wife who is good looking, cultured and cheerful, of Protestant faith, medium and athletic physique and in her middle twenties. I want the dependable, thrifty and self-reliant type, preferably one whose home is here, who has a knowledge of homemaking and who looks forward to homemaking as an honorable profession.

Like myself, she must refrain from the use of intoxicants, and I prefer her not to smoke. Last, but not least, she must be above average in intelligence.

* * * *

Now, do you think I am likely to find such a young lady within a reasonable time, or should I reduce my requirements? Sincerely yours, PHILOSOPHER.

On Choosing a Wife.

DEAR PHILOSOPHER: It seems to me it would take a person with the gift of second sight to tell you where to look for the girl who will correspond exactly to your Bertillon-like measurements. I would not say you should reduce your requirements, exactly, but rather that you should keep them a little more flexible and incline them a little more to the subjective side, as it were. Kinship of mind, fond sympathy for each other's slant on life, a happy and stimulating interplay of personality, make for greater success in marriage, as a rule, than the respective partners' size and shape and muscular tone. You may be ruling out the very woman you should marry in stipulating your future wife must be in her middle twenties. She might be 21 or 31, and still be the wife for you.

* * * *

When you find a woman of the dependable, thrifty and self-reliant type, who is likewise above the average in intelligence, you are going to find a woman who has ideas of her own as to what her profession in life shall be. And if her intelligence is superior, in all probability the time will come when homemaking alone will scarcely appeal as a full-time occupation. Homemaking will be but one of a number of absorbing interests in her life.

* * * *

The best advice I can give you is to look among women in the professions for a wife. The typical successful professional woman is, almost without exception, good looking, cultured and cheerful. She has had to be, to get where she is. As a rule, she goes in for athletics on the side to keep herself in trim, and to get the fresh air and exercise denied during business hours. She has learned the value of dependability, the necessity of thrift, and the hard lesson of self-reliance. It is the professional woman, even more than the home girl, who believes that home, husband and children constitute the richest way of life; who looks upon homemaking as the idyllic occupation.

* * * *

I would not hold out any false hope that all women in the professions are highly learned in the technique of homemaking, however; nor that, after a successful apprenticeship in the business world, they will discover any great aptitude for, nor complete satisfaction in purely domestic pursuits. And I am inclined to believe a goodly number of them have learned to look to the cocktail and the cigarette as legitimate instruments of relaxation and would regard as a prig and a busybody the man who would deny them such gestures for either their soul's or their body's sake. Jury Is Believed Unlikely to Act In Loring Case

Police Refuse to Talk; Indictment Believed Improbable Now.

Chances for an indictment in the Loring murder case appeared slim yesterday as the Prince Georges County grand jury was "officially told" about the fatal garroting of Corinna Loring at Mount Rainier last November.

It was rumored that in the secret session only the barest details of the killing were related. Lieut. Joseph Itzel, of the Baltimore police force, chief investigator, is said to have testified only against Victor Redmond.

Redmond, 42, manager of a Washington lunch room, was arrested during the investigation on a charge of attempted criminal assault. For a while he was considered a suspect in the murder case.

Lieut. William Fiheley and Sergt. Leo Voglesang, Baltimore detectives, and aids to Itzel; Sergt. Ralph Brown, of the county police force; Chief Eugene Plumer and Sergt. George Giddens, Mount Rainier police, also were closeted with the grand jury.

Their testimony, however, was believed to be almost entirely against Redmond. States Attorney Alan Bowie presented the murder case to the 24 grand jurors. Fiheley presented some technical evidence.

Should an indictment be returned, it would not be made known until the first of next week.

When asked for a statement, Itzel said he would rather be quoted as "having nothing to say about the Loring case."

The body of Corinna Loring was found on Saddleback Ridge, Mount Rainier, on November 9. This was five days after she disappeared from the home of her mother, Mrs. Frances Loring, and three days after she was supposed to have married Richard Tear, 29, of 201 Channing street northeast.

So far no plausible reason for the murder has been advanced.

Judge Joseph C. Mattingly, of the Circuit Court, in his charge to the grand jury as it convened for the April session yesterday, was unusually brief.

He asked the State's attorney to look into the large number of peace bonds which are constantly being taken out, but not followed up. He stressed the fact that the grand jury must not be backward in indicting when proper evidence is presented.

Barbara Hutton Appeals 1933 Tax Assessment

By the Associated Press.

Countess Barbara Hutton Haugwitz Reventlow asked the board of tax appeals yesterday to review a $25,108 income tax deficiency assessed by the Treasury for 1933.

She alleged that she was entitled to deductions of $130,000 in expenses incurred by her guardian in the management of her large estate prior to November 14, 1933, the date she attained her majority. No tax was paid by her that year, according to the deficiency notice filed by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Knitting Dispute Ends, 200 Return to Work

Minneapolis, April 6 (AP).—Two hundred workers—first of the 900 Strutwear Knitting Co. employes scheduled to return to work under an agreement which ended an eight-month labor dispute at the plant—reported today as the company resumed activities.

Officials of the company, which suspended operations last August after discharge of eight employes had precipitated a controversy between workers and the management, said operations would be speeded up to bring the plant into full production as soon as possible.

Culbertson on Bridge

(Mr. Culbertson continues his reporting of a bridge game between two married couples, at which he acted as referee. He fines the players for their errors, according to degree.)

"Perhaps I am being conceited," Mrs. Black said, "but I should like to point out that up to this stage I have come through with only one measly $2.50 error."

This remark acted as a bomb to the cordial entente previously existing between the two women. Mrs. White, who had been fined twice, once $5 and once $10, took up the challenge as though the gauntlet had been flung directly at her.

"Yes, I've noticed that blondes pay few fines," she said sweetly. "Perhaps we should have asked Mrs. Culbertson to referee!"

"Helen!" reproved her husband.

The women glared at each other. I used my handkerchief vigorously on my heated brow and the next hand was dealt.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1 spade	Pass
3 spades	Pass	4 spades	Double
Pass	Pass	Redouble	[final bid]

Mrs. White led the king of hearts and Mr. Black laid his cards down as dummy with an apologetic air.

"Guess I slipped again," he mumbled.

"Yes, I guess you did," his wife said, with a vitriolic glare. "That's quite a double raise you have there!"

The ace of hearts followed the king and then a club shift was made. Mrs. Black took the ace and led the club queen. She ruffed her third heart and led a spade to the jack, losing to the queen. Later, South's trump king took the setting trick.

"Well, how much?" asked Mr. Black with pseudo-heartiness.

I hesitated before I answered. I realized that this was going to be the most difficult situation yet encountered, because again I had to brave the wrath of the red-haired Mrs. White. I thought wistfully of dodging the issue, fining only Mr. Black, who, I knew, wouldn't "squawk," and keeping myself out of an explosion, but my stern Scotch heritage came to the fore.

"Five dollars from you, Mr. Black," I said. "But you weren't the only culprit. Your wife, by expert play, could have made the hand! South's double strongly indicated that she held both trump honors. After the ace and queen of clubs were out of the way, the heart should have been ruffed and the club king cashed for a diamond discard. Then the fourth club should have been led and ruffed in the closed hand. Next the ace and king of diamonds and the diamond ruff. Now, with only three cards left, all trumps, in declarer's and South's hands, the jack of spades would have thrown South on lead for a trump end-play. South could have taken only one trump trick.

"But, admittedly, this would have required expert play, and so I'm going to fine Mrs. Black only $2.50 for missing it."

Mrs. White snorted derisively.

"And $5 from you, Mrs. White," I said, avoiding her eyes, "for a bad double that should have cost you a game by placing the cards."

Perhaps I'd better not report what Mrs. White said!

Senate Group Gets District Fund Appeals

Civic Leaders Plead for Health, Police and School Aid.

Chairman Thomas Hints at $5,700,000 Lump Sum Restoration.

By James D. Secrest.

Washington's organized but voteless citizenry yesterday appealed to the Senate sub-committee on District appropriations for an increased Federal contribution, more funds for public health and hospitals, additional policemen, release of the impounded gasoline tax fund and extra school items.

The Federation of Citizens Associations also obtained the tacit indorsement of a proposal to establish a District-Federal commission on fiscal relations, according to Thomas E. Lodge, president.

While the Senate sub-committee continued its hearing on the 1937 District supply bill, the Citizens Joint Committee on Fiscal Relations Between the United States and the District of Columbia submitted its annual brief to Congress in a plea for a more adequate lump-sum payment. This year the committee asked that the $8,317,000 proposed by the Commissioners be restored.

Gallinger Inquiry Today.

Chairman Thomas of the Senate sub-committee already has indicated, however, that the Senate will seek only to restore the Federal contribution to the $5,700,000 recommended by the Budget Bureau. The House cut this figure to $2,700,000.

Today the sub-committee will open another day's hearings with an inquiry into the operation of Gallinger Hospital. Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent, will be called to answer general charges made by Mrs. Lester Buchanan, social welfare patron.

Yesterday's witnesses were emphatic in their demand that impounded gasoline taxes be released for opening and improving streets, and that no surplus be allowed to accumulate in general revenue.

L. C. Crawford, of the traffic committee of the Board of Trade, in asking appropriations for 130 additional policemen and $100,000 for signal lights, pointed out that while $440,000 was lying idle in the gas tax fund, the traffic department couldn't find money to publish books of traffic rules which applicants for drivers' permits might study.

"The traffic department has to depend upon the charity of the American Automobile Association and the Keystone Automobile Club for the booklets," he said.

Extra Job-Ban Attacked.

An attack on the House rider prohibiting any District employe earning $2,400 or more from doing outside work was made by a special committee of the District Education Association headed by R. W. Eaves.

A statement pointed out that the rider, aimed primarily at physicians doing part-time work for the District, would keep school teachers from singing in church choirs, acting as organists, engaging in summer camp teaching, tutoring of handicapped children, or teaching private night schools. It also would prevent teachers from contributing articles to educational periodicals or from writing textbooks, or delivering lectures for pay.

Rufus S. Lusk, secretary of the Washington Taxpayers Association, appeared to oppose any increase in the House appropriation of $1,506,000 for unemployment relief. He said that the only way to curtail District relief is to cut down appropriations.

"If they had $5,000,000 a month," he said, "they would find customers to give it to."

153,000 on Relief, He Says.

Lusk offered figures to show that from August, 1932, to February, 1936, 183,000 persons, or 37.6 per cent of the 1930 population of Washington, was on relief. He said 137,000 colored persons, or 104 per cent of the 1930 colored population, has been on relief and 45,000 or 12.8 per cent of the white population. The number on relief today, he added, is the highest in the city's history.

The citizens' joint committee on fiscal relations, in presenting its petition and an accompanying brief to Speaker Byrns and Vice President Garner, opposed any increase in District taxes and asked that Congress take into consideration the national obligations that fall upon Washington because it is the National Capital.

The committee, of which Edward F. Colladay is chairman, suggested that, if the lump sum cannot be increased, that appropriations for national or seminational institutions in the District be excluded from the District supply bill.

L. A. Carruthers, chairman of the fiscal relations committee, Federation of Citizens Associations, asked the Senate sub-committee to restore the lump sum to $8,317,000 and explained the proposal for a permanent fiscal relations commission as adopted by the federation on Saturday night.

J. Nelson Anderson, general counsel of the Federation of Business Men's Association, urged restoration to the budget figure of $5,700,000.

Cordial to Campbell.

Dr. Charles B. Campbell, chairman of the public health committee of the Citizens' Federation, who was ejected from the House subcommittee hearings by Representative Blanton, was cordially received by the Senate sub-committee.

He asked that appropriations for the health department and certain public welfare items be restored to the figures recommended by the District Commissioners to the Budget Bureau.

Health department items, he pointed out, were cut $98,000 by the Budget Bureau and the House together, while welfare estimates were slashed $5,740,000.

Other federation chairmen and the projects they sponsored follow:

George E. Sullivan, law and legislation: $500,000 to start Northern High School at Fifth and Sheridan streets.

Arthur Adelman, highways, parks and waterways: release of impounded gasoline tax fund for improvement and extension of streets; indorsement of $25,000 for plans for Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge.

Harry N. Stull, education: indorsed appropriations for additions to Eastern High School and Dennison Vocational School, and asked funds for Jefferson Junior High School, Northern High School, an eight-room addition to Bunker Hill School, and $12,000 to keep more playgrounds open the year around.

A. H. Gregory, education, indorsed Eastern High School appropriation.

Fred S. Walker, police and fire: addition of 135 policemen and funds to reopen Second Precinct station.

Harry S. Wender, safety: more money for signal lights and safety zone buttons.

Wender also appeared for William McK. Clayton, of the public utilities committee, to ask an additional $9,020 to employ additional employes in people's counsel's office.

Charles E. Bish, of the High School Teachers Association, asked $10,000 to provide for promotions in the schools.

A. J. Driscoll and Frank B. Huffman, of Mid-City Citizens Association, asked $17,000 to reopen Second Precinct station, Fifth street between M and N streets.

Blanton Beaten In His Wrangle With the G.O.P.

Gives Up Retaliatory War After One Day; Snell Had Blocked His Speech.

Representative Thomas L. Blanton, who challenged the whole Republican Party to a fray after a scrap with Minority Leader Snell last Friday, yesterday threw in the sponge, signifying he had had enough.

On Friday, after Snell had balked his efforts to make a three-minute talk just before adjournment and to extend his remarks in the Record, Blanton angrily threatened to object to any Republican extending his remarks in the Record henceforth.

Yesterday the Texan started on his mission boldly enough but soon ran afoul of the stubborn resistance of Representative Martin, of Massachusetts, assistant minority leader.

After a day of bickering, in which no member was able to extend his remarks into the Record, Blanton admitted he was licked by explaining that his objections would not continue after the House adjourned for the day.

Previously, he had fixed no day of armistice on his war against the Republican minority.

Citizens Urge Condensation Of Traffic Laws

Association Groups Rules of District Into 32 Divisions.

The Du Pont Circle Citizens Association adopted a report condensing the District's several hundred traffic regulations into 32 major rules at its meeting in Mayflower Hotel yesterday.

The report from the committee on streets, parks and traffic, presented by Admiral Mark L. Bristol claimed the present regulations governing traffic were sufficient, but not grouped in an efficient manner. Thirty-two major regulations, mostly those regarding safety, were included.

The same committee reported against the compulsory inspection of automobiles, but requested rigid enforcement of present laws governing equipment on passenger and commercial vehicles.

Approve Budget Plan.

The Forest Hills Citizens Association last night voted to approve the suggestion of the Federation of Citizens Associations that a fiscal relations committee composed of citizens and members of Congress determine the amount of the Federal Government's annual contribution to District expenses.

Gen. Mason M. Patrick, former chairman of the District Public Utilities Commission, delivered an address on the proposed subway for the District. He said that the cost here would be too great.

Oppose Bill.

The Citizens Association of Takoma, D. C., last night voted to oppose the pending Ellenbogen rent commission bill, listened to an optimistic report on the proposed $550,000 Northern High School and re-elected the following officers for the coming year:

W. C. Magathan, president; W. H. Youngman, vice president; Lewis A. Jones, second vice president; W. H. Parsons, recording secretary; W. M. Hurst, corresponding secretary; Norman E. McIndoo, treasurer, and George E. Sullivan and W. C. Magathan, delegates to the federation.

Traffic Appeal.

A resolution urging that both left and right turns by automobiles be banned in the congested downtown area was adopted last night by the Progressive Citizens of Georgetown.

The group voted its support of bills for national representation for the District and for the merger of the Washington and Georgetown gas companies. A committee was named to seek better car and bus service to the downtown area.

Fire Prevention.

Capt. H. A. Chapman, of the District Fire Department, talked on fire prevention at the meeting of the Kenilworth Citizens Association last night. The group voted to cooperate in the "clean-up week" campaign recently proclaimed by the District Commissioners.

Adlai Magee Elected Bethesda C. of C. Head

Adlai S. Magee was elected president of the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce last night. Other officers named were Harry S. Golladay and G. Wady Imirie, vice presidents; John A. Overholt, secretary, and S. Walter Bogley, treasurer.

William Buckley, Joseph A. Cantrel, Earl S. Carlin, A. R. Townshend, S. Roy Robertson and Walter K. Bachrach were named directors. The group voted to banquet retiring officers on May 6 at the Kenwood Club.

D.C. Put 11th Among Cities In Dole Total

February Report Shows 62c Per Capita Relief Expenditure.

6.2% Population Here Was on Rolls; 4,100 Are Cut Off.

Washington ranked eleventh among 32 cities throughout the country in the number of relief cases on its rolls during February, according to a statement made public yesterday by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration concerning cities with population between 250,000 and 1,000,000.

The National Capital ranked eighth in the per capita relief expenditures. Per capita expenditures ranged from 1 per cent in Atlanta, Ga., and 4 cents in Memphis, Tenn., to $1.06 in Pittsburgh and $1.01 in Buffalo. Washington's figure was 62 cents.

The 6.2 per cent of the population of the District on relief in February was exceeded by that in 15 other cities. The percentage ranged from 1 per cent in Dallas to 14.5 per cent in Pittsburgh. The average expenditure per case in the District was fourth highest among the 32 cities, amounting to $29.36 as compared with $31.02 in Boston, $32.27 in Rochester and $30.95 in St. Paul. Amounts dropped down to $2.71 for Memphis, $6.25 for New Orleans and $6.35 for Atlanta.

Radical Change Seen.

There has been a radical change in the relief picture in Washington since February, due to restriction of relief because of lack of money with which to carry on the former relief work.

Just how many persons have been cut off relief officials apparentrly did not know. Elwood Street, welfare director, said "approximately 4,100 cases, averaging 3½ persons per case, or about 14,000 people in all, each2case including one or more employable persons, were dropped from relief on April 1." He said his figures were based on a preliminary report for March submitted by Miss M. Alice Hill, director of the public assistance division.

This estimate, however, was not in accord with previous analyses of relief statistics, which showed that the average number of persons per case among employables was much more than 3½ persons, while the opposite was true among unemployable cases. According to figures reported to Federal relief officials for February, the 10,244 cases then on the books represented only 30,326 individuals, by actual count. At the beginning of March, Street said, there was a total of 9,924 cases on the relief books, of which 1,091 were aid-for-dependent-children cases.

Suspected of Tuberculosis.

Other cases of distress due to the slashing of all employable cases from the rolls were brought to public attention during the day as desperate persons sought some kind of special ruling which would help them.

One case involved a family of 11. Two children are suspected of tuberculosis and one other child is actively consumptive. The father worked 12 years for one company, earning $50 a week. He was seriously injured three years ago. Still suffering from this injuries, he sought work from his former employer, when injury compensation was stopped, but was told there was no job for him.

He finally was put on a WPA job at $45 a month. His health broke completely and in a few weeks he was in Gallinger Hospital. His family was on relief. He went back to his WPA job, again fell ill and again was sent to the hospital. He has returned to the WPA job but he won't get his first check until April 16. It will be for $22.50. Meanwhile relief for his family has been cut off. The children are undernourished. The family has lost most of their household furnishings. Their rent is due. They haven't money to pay it.

Bryn Mawr Club Offers Student Scholarship

The Bryn Mawr Club of Washington will offer its annual $500 scholarship for the freshman year at Bryn Mawr College to a graduate of one of the District's schools this June, it was announced yesterday.

Applicants should apply to the Alumni Scholarship and Loan Fund committee. The scholarship will be granted on the basis of entrance examinations and student need. Graduates from public as well as private schools are eligible.

Court Applies Lottery Law To Numbers

Appeals Bench Provides Police With Weapon Against Gambling.

High Tribunal Refuses to Review Conviction of Sam Beard.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Gambling in Washington was dealt two of the severest legal blows in the city's history yesterday.

Under a United States Court of Appeals decision, the "numbers" racket was held to be a lottery, providing local authorities with their first concrete weapon of enforcement. And by refusal of the United States Supreme Court to review his case, Sam Beard, convicted gaming chief, was sent well on his way to a term in the penitentiary.

Ruling on an appeal from conviction by John R. Forte, accused "numbers" runner, Associate Justice Josiah A. Van Orsdel, United States Court of Appeals, said:

"In our opinion, the 'numbers game' is a lottery. The question is a novel one in the District, but it has been considered in a number of State courts."

Forced to Wink.

By this decision, convicted "numbers" operators now face the maximum penalty of a $500 fine, three years' imprisonment, or both. Heretofore, no local laws covered the thriving racket and police were forced literally to wink at all activities. The local lottery law is covered in Section 863 of the District Code.

By refusing to review Beard's case, the Supreme Court virtually closed the door on the gambling chieftain's last chance to escape a prison term. He was convicted with 12 others in District Supreme Court of conspiring to violate the gaming laws, and was sentenced to serve from two to six years in prison.

And to "beat the rap" Beard and his cohorts now have but the remote chance of asking the Supreme Court to grant a second petition. If no action is taken on this—and authorities doubt if it will even be filed—the prison sentence given by Justice Joseph W. Cox in District Supreme Court must stand.

Held Rights Violated.

Beard's arrest, police say, uncovered the city's largest race track telephone information bureau. It was estimated that the establishmen—a suite in the Mather Building—was equipped to complete 1,600 simultaneous telephone calls.

Investigators charged that Beard's information bureau was furnishing up to the minute race track news to a score of places in the District. Bets, police declared, were made and paid off on the basis of telephone information.

Beard, through Attorney John J. Sirica, appealed his conviction because, it was claimed, the Government used wire tapping methods to obtain evidence. He claimed that was a violation of his constitutional rights. He also contended that the conversations recorded by secret agents were not linked to him or any of his employes.

Claimed Warrant Illegal.

The portly gambler, who once served a jail term for failing to pay an income tax on his gaming profits, further contended that police had no right to search the Mather Building suite, nor to seize anything they found, because the warrant on which they acted was illegal.

By refusal of the Supreme Court to accept any of these contentions, Beard will have to begin service of his sentence within a month, unless the Nation's highest tribunal reverses itself. Assistant United States Attorney Roger Robb prosecuted the case.

Those convicted with Beard were William Carroll, James T. Gallagher, Fred H. Heck, George E. Hutchins, Melville G. Jacobs, Sidney Kaplan, Lewis L. Levy, Fred J. Meese, Timothy H. Noel, Joseph A. O'Callaghan, John J. Sortori and William G. Smith. They were sentenced from one to three years in prison.

Commenting yesterday on both the Beard and "numbers" decisions, Lieut. George M. Little, police vice squad commander, said:

"We are tremendously encouraged. It has been a pretty tough day for the gamblers, but it will have a lasting effect on Washington gambling. It's the biggest blow in history and now, at last, we have some basis to 'crack down' on the 'numbers' racket. With a big-shot like Beard behind the bars, the little fellows will have to watch their step."

Pennsylvanian Arrested Here In Well-Killing of Sister, 75

William Double in Custody of Policeman M. J. Engle.

William E. Double, 59, Seized at Postoffice Calling For Mail; Anger Over Victim's Will Is Alleged as the Motive.

William Elmer Double, 59, sought by police in connection with the brutal murder of his 75-year-old sister in Butler County, Pa., April 1, was arrested here yesterday after he appeared at the city postoffie for mail.

Nation-wide search was instituted for Double when the body of Mrs. Laura E. Kelly was found with her head crushed from blows of a blunt instrument in a well a short distance from the house they occupied together.

The body was discovered by neighbors who went to the farm house after Mrs. Kelly had not been seen for several days. Her feet were noticed protruding from the water in the bottom of the 12-foot well. A trail of blood was traced 150 feet from there to the house. Double and his sister ran the farm together. They had been doing so for 14 months.

Automobile Found.

Double's automobile, containing a pair of blood-stained boots and some clothing, was found in front of his wife's house in New Kensington, Pa., the day after the crime. When questioned by police, Mrs. Double said her husband had left the car there and said he was going away for a few days. She said she knew nothing of the slaying.

Double was traced to Washington two days ago. He was arrested when he left the postoffice by Detective Sergt. Charles Warder, of Washington, and Policemen Paul E. Smith and James L. Steuk.

Smith said Mrs. Kelly had an estate valued at $25,000. He stated the estate was to be divided and that a controversy arose over the division. Double was not questioned in regard to the crime yesterday.

Double has been living in a rooming house in the 100 block E street northwest for the past three days. Search of the room yesterday disclosed a letter written to Mrs. Double. Police said the letter stated Double had destroyed Mrs. Kelly's will. A pistol also was found in the room.

Waives Extradition.

Following his arrest, Double said he would return to Pennsylvania for trial. He signed extradition papers, but will be arraigned in Police Court to be formally released from this jurisdiction.

He is a Spanish-American War veteran and had been employed as a carpenter.

Police of Butler County told reporters Mrs. Kelly was the owner of the farm that Double had been running for her. They said Mrs. Kelly was regarded as wealthy and that Double resented the way financial matters were handled.

Double is alleged, police said, to have become enraged when the contents of the woman's will did not contain a substantial amount for him.

Double was placed in the Fifth Precinct station last night to await hearing. He will probably be taken back to Pennsylvania this afternoon.

Auto Injuries On Friday Fatal To Pedestrian

Youthful Driver of Death Car to Be Given a Hearing Today.

Edward Arnold, Negro, 50, of 1500 Caroline street northwest, died yesterday at Freedmen's Hospital from injuries received Friday when he was struck by an automobile at Fifteenth and U streets northwest.

Police said the car was operated by Peter H. Barry, Negro, 30, of 2380 Champlain street northwest. Arnold's death brought the year's death total from traffic to 26. Barry was held for action of the coroner.

James A. Bettis, 15, of 119 B street northeast, will appear at a coroner's inquest today as the driver of the automobile which struck and killed James Quirk, of 1314 Tenth street northwest.

Quirk died in George Washington University Hospital Sunday. He was knocked down in an alley in the rear of 1317 H street northwest Saturday while walking with Charles R. Rogers, 466 Massachusetts avenue northwest. Rogers was slightly hurt.

The jury has the power to hold young Bettis for the action of the grand jury or for the action of the Juvenile Court, if he is found responsible for Quirk's death.

A second inquest will be held in the death of Walter P. Brown, 67, of 4515 Illinois avenue northwest. Brown died in Providence Hospital April 1 a few hours after he was struck by a street car at Second street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

Richard H. Harvey, 61, 1021 Twenty-sixth street northwest, motorman of the car, released in custody of a company attorney, will be at the inquest.

Bank Pays Dividend.

Hagerstown, Md., April 6.—Checks totaling $86,000 were mailed today to depositors of the closed Mechanics Loan & Saving Bank, representing 5 per cent of their deposits when the bank closed three years ago. The receiver thus far has paid back 50 per cent of deposits.

Health Study Will Be Urged On President

Dr. Willson Cites Need for Survey Here by U. S. Service.

Restoration of Slashes Stressed by Campbell to Civic Group.

The civic committee on public health voted last night to ask President Roosevelt to order the United States Public Health Service to make a survey of District health conditions.

Thus the committee, of which Dr. Sterling Ruffin is chairman, took another step in its current battle to insure adequate health protection for Washington.

The request was made at a meeting of the committee in the Medical Society Building and is similar to that taken by the District Tuberculosis Association at a public meeting March 26.

Dr. Prentiss Willson, one of the leaders in the District Medical Society's campaign for ample public health appropriations, who proposed the survey at the March meeting, explained it to the committee last night.

He said the study should be completed and its findings published in time to be submitted to the Budget Bureau and Congress before the District's 1938 supply bill is acted upon. The 1937 bill is now under consideration in the Senate, having passed the House.

Dr. C. B. Campbell, representing the health committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations, yesterday made a strong health plea before the Senate committee.

He argued that the original estimate of the Health Department, which had been practically cut in half, be restored. He testified at length as to the inadequate appropriations for health in Washington.

To strengthen his plea for more funds to fight tuberculosis here, Dr. Campbell pointed out that 6½ per cent of the 10,000 persons X-rayed last fall showed traces of tuberculosis.

Garbo Presents Fading Appeal To Employers

Film Studio Faces Problem of Regaining Ground in Box-Office Battle.

By Relman Morin.

Hollywood, April 6 (AP).—The Garbo legend, once Hollywood's most valuable publicity vehicle, is coasting down the lonesome road of public indifference.

And movie "experts" in such things have promised to do something about it.

The Swedish screen star's home studio, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is faced with the task of regaining much lost ground in a "box office battle" with Marlene Dietrich, Merle Oberon and other actresses who have passed her in her own field.

Exhibitors have reported Miss Garbo no longer is among the first ten in box office appeal. She has slipped from a pre-eminent position in the money-earning field.

But exhibitors have been promised a new Garbo picture by August. The actress, who has not appeared in a picture for more than a year, is due to report for work here by May 15 at the latest, having arrived in New York from her native Sweden today.

Stories in Prospect.

At the moment, that old faithful of the stage, "Camille," is being prepared for her. But there is some front office dissension as to whether that story or the European play, "Countess Waleska," should be the opening gun in her come-back battle.

"Camille," the executives believe, is a more sympathetic role: "Waleska," they feel, is more alluring. It's a question of which they decide Miss Garbo needs more.

Meanwhile, an elegant new dressing salon has been built for her in a new artists' building, completed since she went home to Sweden. Studio executives are counting heavily on pictures and stories about the new Garbo lair to rebuild her fascination in the public mind.

What they fear, however, is that she won't move into it.

"She's funny," one movie head said today. "It's dollars to doughnuts she won't help by moving in after we've spent all that money."

And the Garbo legend, on the lot at least, is still strong enough for her to refuse to take orders.

About The Showshops

UNABLE to board a plane from the airport from which he had expected to take off, and, therefore, compelled to come to the Capital by train, Raymond Massey, distinguished British actor, arrived in Washington yesterday afternoon at 2:35 o'clock and for an hour or two was made the victim of a concerted attack by the drama desks of the local press in Suite 236 in the Carlton Hotel.

BELL.

It must be said for Mr. Massey that he withstood the barrage of questions with fine fortitude and established himself in the critical estimation as as fine a gentleman as he is brilliant actor.

With a tea at the British Embassy at 5 and the necessity of being back in New York for tonight's performance of "Ethan Frome," Mr. Massey's visit to town was one continuous round of catching taxicabs, rushing from one engagement to another and then boarding whatever means of transportation happened to be in operation late last night.

There was sufficient time yesterday afternoon, however, to learn that the harried and hounded visitor spent eight months in preparing and performing the principal male role in "Things to Come," the filmization of a condensed version of H. G. Well's monumental volume of "The Shape of Things to Come," which will be accorded an "international preview" in the Wardman Park Theater tonight at 8:30, with one of Washington's most representative audiences in attendance, and that the studio was busy on the production for almost two years. It already has opened in Miami, Fla., for public exhibition and tonight's preview will lack something of the smug exclusiveness of an "American premiere," much less a "world premiere," since the film has been running in London since last February.

* * * *

DURING production, H. G. Wells, author of the story, was a frequent visitor on the set, and, like George Bernard Shaw, exercised an eternal vigilance lest some line of dialogue be changed or entirely omitted. It seems that Mr. Wells has a very definite purpose in mind in bringing this message to the silver sheet and did not intend to have that purpose or his message garbled.

Contrary to popular belief, "Things to Come" was supervised, but not personally directed, by Alexander Korda, executive head of London Films. It was directed by William Cameron Menzies, familiar to American audiences from his many fine achievements in Hollywood, where Mr. Korda once was a director himself for First National, with his wife, Maria Corda, usually the leading woman in the picture over which he presided with the megaphone.

As for Mr. Massey's personal inclination in the matter, he, like so many others of the stage, would consider it an ideal arrangement if he might be enabled to spend half of his time on the boards and the other half before the cameras and microphones. He already has appeared in Hollywood productions and has in prospect an important role of Frank Capra's impending production of "The Lost Horizon," provided the studio work can be deferred until after the run of "Ethan Frome," a current Broadway success.

It pleases Mr. Massey greatly to hear the Washington critics extol the personal charm and conspicuous ability of his wife, Adrienne Allen, who appeared here, and still appears, in the leading feminine role in Max Gordon's production of Helen Jerome's dramatization of Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice." It was Mr. Gordon, too, who produced "Ethan Frome." With regard to his producer's sagacity in the theater, Mr. Massey is extremely enthusiastic. He looks upon Max Gordon as one of the most astute of the theater's active practitioners—a man who could often improve even the high quality of his own productions by taking a more active personal part in their preparation, instead of intrusting such work to his subordinates.

This corroborates what Marc Connelly told me when he was here directing "The Farmer Takes a Wife" for Mr. Gordon. "He never goes behind the footlights," was the way the author of "The Green Pastures" expressed it.

* * * *

IN ADDITION to being equally stanch in his advocacy of both stage and screen as worthy mediums of any actor's expression, this distinguished player also entertains feelings of cordial warmth toward the radio. He would like to do more of that sort of thing, one gathers.

If justice is done, Mr. Massey feels sure that the Pulitzer Prize this year will go to Robert E. Sherwood's "Idiot's Delight," starring Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne. This he deems one of the most perfectly balanced examples of modern play-writing that he ever has encountered. In his estimation, it "has everything."

The Masseys and the Sherwoods, by the way, are close friends, who spend much time visiting each other's homes when both are in England. Mr. Massey, as has been previously recorded here, is a native of Toronto, Ontario, although his family landed in New England in 1630 and resided there for almost two centuries before crossing the northern border.

In appearance, Raymond Massey is above medium height, slight in physique and precisely the actor to make an ideal Hamlet, which he assuredly does, as already proved by performance.

The sometimes disconcerting bombardment of a detachment of interviewers leaves him unruffled. He is a poised, patient and literate gentleman whom it is a pleasure to meet.

And in a brown double-breasted suit in the Duke of Kent, button-the-bottom-button style, with soft white shirt and small bow tie, he doesn't look any more like an actor than you do—unless a ready smile and thoughtful eyes bespeak the calling.

Present at yesterday afternoon's liquid and loquacious levee was Divisional Manager Carter Tate Barron, of Loew's, Inc., just back from three weeks in Florida and looking tan as the bark of that name and fit as a fiddle—not necessarily Ben Bernie's. Mr. and Mrs. Barron, in their Southern jaunt, pretty thoroughly traversed the State of Florida, from Miami to Jacksonville, and missed the Cordele, Ga., hurricane by a matter of hours, driving through the fringes of the storm in a torrential downpour for many hours. So they think the gentle sprinkles we have had these past few days are comparatively clear weather made for sun baths! Oh, yeah?

* * * *

Well, that is what makes horse racing, as the man said. I mean the division of opinion that has arisen over the new form of this column and the general change in make-up of this page.

One correspondent writes in to say, "New make-up is much better—easier to read." On the same mail, another remarks, "I have been a reader of your column for many years and have also talked with you over the phone when I had a question about someone in show business and you have been kind enough to give me the answer . . . To me the column as it is written up today is harder to read than heretofore."

Still another, with a keen appreciation of the personal pulchritude possessed by your reporter, states frankly, "Well, I, for one, like the column in its new dress—even with your picture! I'm so glad you have touched up your hair, shaved off the long white whiskers, and—I hope—thrown away the crutches."

What! And ride around in a wheelchair all the time?

The Gossipel Truth.

Hollywood, April 5.

MARLENE DEITRICH although escorted by Willis Goldbeck, seldom poses for a photograph with him, preferring to have her picture taken with a "name." . . . Paramount will be sued for $100,000 by Charles Furthman who states that the Mae West flicker, "Klondike Annie," was taken from the story, "Reno Annie," which he submitted to that company. Furthman claims that the returned copy of his story has the official Paramount stamp on it . . . The Elaine Barrie-John Barrymore screen test is run in the projection room at Metro whenever an executive feels bored . . . When Director Bill Howard had his quarrel with Arthur Hornblow, Director John Ford sent Howard a sizzling telegram, defending him, but which made people wonder how it got over the wires . . . A noted western star was walking into a producer's office to talk about a new contract and Tom Jenk said: "If that guy would send in his horse he'd make a better deal."

DIETRICH.

The Sunset Towers is Hollywood's biggest apartment house and last week all tenants were told they would have to move. Movie stars, producers and directors were told to get out. They all objected, but all moved, except H. N. Swanson, the literary agent . . . Swanson told the new owner that he could shut off the lights and water; that he would use candles and bottled water . . . They believed Swanson was bluffing, forgot about him, and locked the entire building. Swanson couldn't get out of the Sunset Towers and was a prisoner there for half a day . . . Picture business is so bad these days that they even have "Bank Nite" in the projection rooms.

Wendy Barrie and James Stewart, who take direction on how to play love scenes in the flicker, "Speed," don't need any direction to play their offstage love scenes . . . S. N. Behrman, who will probably win the Pulitzer Award for "End of Summer," misses his companion, Oscar Levant . . . Lady Gurnsey invited over a hundred people to her house for a cocktail party Saturday, and when they arrived they discovered that she had gone away for the week-end . . . Nunnally Johnson, who hails from the South, was asked if he came in contact with the type of people portrayed in "Tobacco Road." . . . Johnson answered: "Where I come from that kind of people are called 'the country set.'" Shirley Temple went to Palm Springs for a vacation with Mrs. Temple and Detective John Griffith . . . Shirley annoyed her mother during the night by doing a tap dance while sleeping . . . Mrs. Temple wakened Shirley and told her to stop dancing . . . Shirley said she was sorry, she didn't know what she was doing, and meaning to be nice said: "Why don't you go in the next room with Grif and sleep?" . . . Simile: A chest as thick as eight dollars worth of lettuce.

The members of the Screen Writers' Guild have been fighting amongst themselves. They held several meetings last week. If the screen writers ever go on strike, Gene Fowler believes the writers will send their butlers out to picket for them . . . Shirley Ross' big romance is Bill Stelling, a new player at Twentieth Century-Fox . . . Her former flame, Henry Fonda, is now very attentive to ex-wife Margaret Sullavan . . . Which may be why their love scenes are so fine in one of the most entertaining flickers of the season, "The Moon's Our Home" . . . Bill Grady says that Director Clarence Brown is so proud of his new razor that he has a white tile bathroom so he can see the hair on the floor.

Victor McLaglen has the walls of his dressing room decorated with photographs, practically in the nude, which display his physique . . . Johnny Walker, whose wife is seeking a separation, will file a counter suit for divorce . . . While he was in New York, Herman Mankiewicz had a quarrel with Jed Harris . . . The next morning Harris phoned Mankiewicz and said: "I have made a prediction about you and have placed it in an envelope. When it comes true I'll let you see it." . . . Later, during the conversation, Harris said: "I'm going to tell you the prediction now. Mankiewicz, you'll wind up in the gutter." . . . The next day Mankiewicz told George S. Kaufman what Harris had said . . . Kauffman replied: "Mank, you won't be able to get a seat in that gutter. I'm in it, Alexander Woollcott's in it, Ben Hecht's in it and George Jean Nathan. You'll have to go to McBride's."

Ida Lupino is very much in love with Louis Hayward. The business at the nudist colony at the San Diego Fair was flopping until the manager hired a Chinese chorus gal . . . Jeanne Madden, a talented singer, will make her screen debut in the flicker, "Stage Struck." . . . The local newspapers carried stories that Miss Madden was from the Metropolitan Opera House. They forgot to state that it was in the Metropolitan Opera House building that she took singing lessons . . . Seymour Felix, the diminutive dancer director, is in New York for the opening of "The Great Ziegfeld," and William Anthony McGuire received word that Seymour Felix was seen scaling the curb in front of the Astor Theater.

Petworth School Pupils To Give Dance Recital

Three students of Petworth School, Doris Talbert, Cassie Fisher and Phyllis Abrams, will present a brief program of dance under the direction of their teacher, Mrs. Eileen Nicodemus, at 8 p. m. today at the Petworth School.

Mrs. Nicodemus also will present three dances. Harmon Nicodemus, pianist, will be accompanist.

'And You Push the Middle Valve Down!'

The music may, or may not, go 'round and 'round in this subject, but, at least, it could with all of that tuba on hand to afford the facilities. The young man expending his lung power on the instrument, in case you haven't guessed, is Gary Cooper, and the girl, Jean Arthur. They have the leading roles in Frank Capra's latest production, "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," a comedy based on the Clarence Budington Kelland story. George Bancroft, Lionel Stander and Douglas Dumbrille also are in this picture, coming along soon to a local screen.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office

By Morgan Baker.

CIVILIAN employes who are under the supervision of military officers find, in general—though there are numerous exceptoins—that their lot is not to be envied, according to the American Federation of Government Employes.

The reason, the A. F. G. E. quotes their civilian employe members, is that the Army or Navy trains its officers to deal with enlisted men who naturally are subjected to military discipline. The average Army or Navy officer, it is claimed, sees in civilian employes the same sort of material that he sees in enlisted men, and treats them accordingly.

BAKER.

"But," points out Claude Babcock, A. F. G. E. president, "military discipline does not work well in civilian employ. Consequently there are more personnel problems, in the naval and military establishments than in those agencies which are controlled entirely by civilians."

The Navy Department alone, of all Government departments, it is charged by the A. F. G. E., opposed the extension of annual leave—though it favored the five-day week in the service. The Navy Department, too, has substituted WPA workers for regular maintenance employes at a number of stations, though it disclaims responsibility for this and attributes it to Congressional failure to provide enough funds to keep its regular forces intact, Babcock declares.

"But the occasion for civilian complaints," Babcock continues, "as brought out in messages from employes to the A. F. G. E., is that Army and Navy officers tend to be arbitrary in their dealings with civilian subordinates, and that officers stand together against civilians, so that appeals against alleged arbitrary action by one officer to another are, worse than useless. There also appears to be opposition among Army and Navy officers to unionization of Government employes, as manifested in restrictions against collection of union dues, dealing with grievances through the union, etc., although unions of Government workers are, perhaps, given more definite legal recognition by the Navy Department than anywhere else, and such recognition is both a matter of law and fact throughout the service.

"There are, of course, numerous exceptions to the general feeling that military people are 'hard-boiled.'"

Members of War Local No. 231, National Federation of Federal Employes, will gather at 8 p. m. today at 710 Fourteenth street northwest, to hold a business meeting, which will be followed by an exhibition of the Pan-American Airways film, "Flying the Lindbergh Trail." Miss Gertrude Coyle (C), will preside.

A. F. G. E. Meetings.

Meetings of various units of the American Federation of Government Employes included the following:

Justice Lodge, No. 21, met last night in Room 1268, Justice Building.

St. Elizabeths Lodge, No. 28, met last night at the hospital, when 187 new members were obligated.

Public Assistance Division Lodge, No. 249, will meet today.

Civil Service Commission, Employes Compensation Commission and Tariff Commission lodges will hold a joint meeting at the Hamilton Hotel at 8 p. m. tomorrow to hear Miss Selma Borchardt, of the American Federation of Teachers, speak on "Working Conditions in America and Europe."

Resettlement Lodge, No. 206, will meet at 1328 G street northwest at 8 p. m. Thursday.

Public Welfare Lodge, No. 86, will meet at 1101 M street northwest at 8 p. m. Thursday.

St. Elizabeths Hospital Lodge, No. 98, will meet at 1707 Seventh street northwest at 8 p. m. Thursday.

Employes of Reports Unit, Resettlement Administration, enjoyed a buffet luncheon and entertainment at the Hamilton Hotel recently, with Joseph Hoover and Robert Fuchs, Finance Division, as guests of honor. William Carter and Al Greenbaum planned the affair, under auspices of the Emanon Club.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Washington Chamber Music Society presents the Pro Musica Quartet (Bernard Robbins, Jeno Sevely, Hendrik Essers and Sidney Hamer) in the final concert of the season Monday afternoon in Phillips Memorial Gallery. Assisting artist: Harold Gomberg, oboe. Program: Quartet movement in C minor (Schubert), "Italian Serenade" (Wolf), Quartet in F major for oboe and strings (Mozart), Quartet in G minor (Debussy).

One thanks the Pro Musica foursome for the opportunity of hearing again the charming fragment of Schubert's fancy—those lyrical pages which nobody seems to have officiously labeled the unfinished quartet. Found among his manuscripts, this movement in C minor is quite evidently another of the works which he laid aside after the inspiration waned, satisfied with the expression of the idea and uninterested in pursuing it further because a new subject has occurred to him. It remains one of the careless emanations of his fecund mind, but none the less beautiful for its casual character.

Hugo Wolf's Italian serenade is one of the many Germanic compositions kindled by the sunny southland. Doubtless a monograph has been written on the influence which Italy has exerted upon the composers north of the Alps, but if none exists, the subject is a good one for a doctoral thesis. Memory readily suggests Schuetz, Handel, Mozart, Mendelsson, Brahms and Richard Strauss as outstanding examples of musical thinkers who were inspired by a sojourn in Italy.

Harold Gomberg acquitted himself very commendably in the quartet which Mozart composed 155 years ago for his friend, Friedrich Ramm, virtuoso oboe of the Mannheim Orchestra. It is a delightful work in which the oboe is given a fioritura role that requires skill and thorough musicianship.

The Debussy quartet, tenuous as a fabric of moonbeams, was played a little too heavily for my taste. The musicians read it with understanding of its form and ideational content, but with too strong an emphasis in many passages which seemed underscored by an excited hand.

Soviet Will Show Chaplin in Russia

The Soviet motion picture industry, acting through its American agents, the Amkino Corporation, has secured from United Artists the distribution rights to "Modern Times," Charlie Chaplin's new production, according to a joint statement issued today by V. Verlinsky, president of Amkino, and officials of United Artists.

The distribution agreement also includes Chaplin's "City Lights," and represents the first time that any of Chaplin's sound films will have been shown in the Soviet Union.

The deal on behalf of United Artists was concluded last Saturday by Arthur W. Kelly, vice president in charge of foreign sales, prior to his departure for Mexico. The announcement has been delayed, however, until all signatures to the contract had been obtained.

"Modern Times" will be shown in theaters of the U. S. S. R. ahead of "City Lights" in order to capitalize on both the timeliness of the more recent Chaplin production and the international publicity it has obtained since its opening in other world capitals.

Needs Little Editing.

Public interest in "Modern Times" is said to be running high in the U. S. S. R. ever since a Soviet film delegation, headed by Boris Shumiatsky, returned from Hollywood with enthusiastic reports of the picture which they had previewed in its unfinished form as the guests of Chaplin.

The cabled report of the opening of "Modern Times" in New York, sent to the Soviet Union by Tass, Russian news agency, is reported as the longest ever sent on the subject of a motion picture production.

It is expected that "Modern Times" will require a minimum of editing in order to make it understandable to Russian audiences. According to Verlinsky, little will be needed beyond a small number of superimposed titles.

An invitation to Chaplin to attend the opening of "Modern Times" in Moscow is expected to go forward shortly. The star is now in Singapore on a trip around the world.

Horton Smith Wins Augusta Tourney Over Cooper by 1 Stroke

Cloudburst Drenches Finals

Playing Conditions Are Protested in Hope of Postponement.

Cooper Is Overhauled as Victor Ends With 285 Total.

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

AUGUST, Ga., April 6.—Coming from behind on a golf course so drenched by a cloudburst that his professional brethren officially protested playing conditions, in quest of another postponement, sharp-shooting Horton Smith, of Chicago, today captured the colorful but storm-tossed Augusta National Invitation Tournament for the second time in three years.

The tall Missouri-born professional, victor here in 1934, staged a sub-par finish on the flooded links to overhaul "Lighthorse Harry" Cooper, of Chicago, and win by a single stroke.

Between and during downpours, Smith shot successive rounds of 74, 71, 68, and 72 for a 72 hole total of 285, three under par and one stroke short of his winning tally two years ago. The victory was worth $1,500 in cash to the tall, smooth-playing shot-maker who owed his conquest to one of the hottest putting performances ever seen in major competition.

Cooper Gets $800.

Cooper, who had triumph snatched from him on the last two holes after pace-setting all the way, had rounds of 70, 69, 71 and 76 for his aggregate of 286. His share of the prize money amounted to $800.

Third place went to another great finisher, Gene Sarazen, the Connecticut farmer and winner of last year's tournament with the aid of his famous "double eagle" on the last round. Gene, during the height 2 under par, after previous scores of the downpour, shot a final 70, of 78, 67 and 72, thereby totaling 287.

The rest of the all-stars, reduced to 45 players for today's 36-hole finals as a result of the tournament's second postponement, was scattered all over the place, from 5 strokes to upwards of 30 behind the winner. Like so many refugees from the storm, they staggered through with the forlorn, rain-drenched figure of the one-time world champion, Robert T. Jones, jr., of Atlanta, among them.

Jones Is Dismal.

Jones' third annual "comeback" was marked by the worst weather for any of the three tournaments here and Bobby's most dismal showing in competition. After a pair of 78s last Friday and Saturday, the Georgian posted 73 and 77 for his final two rounds. This gave him a total of 306, no less than 18 over par and 21 full shots behind the winner. It was his worst tally in open competition since he scored 311 in the 1927 National Open at Oakmont.

Jones isn't "through," so far as playing at Augusta is concerned, but he has had his "third strike" here and there's no longer any hope that he can come back, once a year, to match shots with the professionals. He intends to play again next spring, but it will be just a formality and there will be no such enthusiasm as the betting fraternity manifested in making him a 6-to-1 favorite this time, following four straight practice rounds in 15 under par. The difference of 34 shots between Jones' practice rounds and tournament play for 72 holes is the final tip-off.

The professionals were not in

Ousted Games Head Charges 'Nazi-ism'

Ornstein Claims Olympic Body Adopted German 'Color, Tactics.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 6.—Charles L. Ornstein, ousted as a member of the American Olympic Committee, charged today the committee no longer represents the "sporting spirit of American tradition, but had adopted the color and tactics of Nazi Germany."

Ornstein was voted off the committee after sharp oral exchanges with other members over his insistence that the United States not participate in the Olympic games in Germany.

"I have no quarrel with the maker of yesterday's resolution ousting me," Ornstein said. "Dietrich Wortman was simply following the pattern of the man to whom he gives his allegiance—Adolph Hitler. Wortman makes no secret of his approval of the policies of Nazi Germany; he has even appeared under the segis of the swastika in New York City. In Nazi Germany purges are commonplace—in fact that is how Hitler retains his power. Are Messrs. Avery Brundage and Gustavus Kirby (president and treasurer of the committee) taking lessons from Wortman's master?"

Ornstein, who was prominent in an Olympic-boycott movement last winter, said his ousting was illegal in that he was placed on the committee by the American Olympic Association.

"Sunday's action by the American Olympic Committee was dictated by fear; fear that the question of U. S. participation might be reopened and that approval might be withdrawn," he said.

Richmond Golf Play Will Begin on Friday

Richmond, Va., April 6 (AP).—Dates for the $3,000 Richmond Golf Open have been changed at the request of the Professional Golfers Association and play in the 72-hole medal event will begin on Friday, instead of Thursday as originally scheduled.

Announcement to this effect was made tonight by John F. Kohler, jr., chairman of the athletic committee for the Retail Merchants Association spring festival after a long-distance telephone conversation with Robert E. Harlow, secretary of the P. G. A., who is at Augusta.

Pointers Given To Furr From Sickbed

Eddie Darby Instructs Phil While Laid Up in Hospital.

PHIL FURR, District welterweight champion, received instructions from the bedside of a trusted friend and trainer while he was preparing to defend his title in a 15-round bout with Cary Wright at Turner's Arena tonight.

It seems that for his last few highly successful bouts, Philip was coached and whipped into physical condition by Eddie Darby, a policeman with a yen for anything pertaining to the box-fighting racket, particularly anything in which Furr is concerned.

Recently Darby went to a hospital for treatment to his back, injured in line of duty two years ago. He was trussed up in a cast. The confinement irked Darby even more than it would normally because he could not get to the gymnasium to help Furr prepare himself for Wright.

Furr liked Darby's absence from his training quarters not a bit also. So, Philip started hieing himself to the hospital every day. At Darby's bedside he received long and careful instructions as to how he was to train the following day.

To cap the climax, Darby is seeking permission from his physicians to leave the hospital just for a few hours to watch Furr in action against Wright. Even if the doctors agree to let him attend, he will probably have to be wheeled into the arena—still trussed up.

His training siege finished, Furr apparently is in the very best of condition. He is grouchy and irritable—always a sign of good fighting condition—and says he has had no trouble making the welterweight limit of 147 pounds.

Wright too is in the best of shape. Despite the overwhelming odds being offered on Furr, who is quoted at all sorts of prices, ranging from 1 to 4 to 1 to 8, the challenger is serenely confident.

"Furr used to be my sparring partner," Wright pointed out. "Once a sparmate, always a sparmate. Don't forget everyone was picking Lew Ambers to whip Tony Canzoneri, but Lew once had been Tony's sparring partner—and when they got in the ring for action, Ambers naturally let Canzoneri be the boss. That's the way it is between Phil and myself."

Bob Wilson, the only man ever to knock out Wright, is matched with Jack Duffy, himself somewhat of a slugger, in a semifinal scheduled for eight rounds. Johnny Dean

Globes Battle Universal Tonight

Olympic Final Game to Be Replayed at Tech Gym.

Giant Centers to Clash; Kansas Club Eager for Revenge.

UNIVERSAL PICTURES, of Hollywood, Calif., winners of the Olympic basketball tryouts, and the Globe Refiners, of McPherson, Kans., will cross paths for the third time this season, with Tech High School the scene tonight starting at 9 o'clock.

In what is considered Washington's biggest basketball attraction, Universal and the Refiners are expected to clash before a capacity crowd.

McPherson having won the first game, 47 to 35 in the National A. A. U. finals at Denver a few weeks ago, and Universal the second contest, 44-43, in their Olympic battle Sunday night at Madison Square Garden, tonight's scrap promises to be packed with plenty of action and sensation shooting.

Both teams arrived last night from New York, and took up quarters at the Ambassador Hotel.

Although the Kansans as a team are much loftier than their California rivals, the picture boys make up in speed, deception and strength what they lack in height.

Nats Due Here Today, Game Is Rained Out

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

IN BETWEEN Cloudbursts, Tenn., April 6.—The Washington Nationals were speeding homeward tonight as the sunny Southland wept copious tears over their departure.

The tears were, as usual, in the form of rain which tumbled down from the smoky skies above Knoxville, Tenn., all day yesterday, washed out the National's game there with the Knoxville Smokies of the Southern Association and sent the team on its way home four hours ahead of time. The team will arrive at 8:40 a. m. tomorrow.

It was the fourth straight playing day the Nationals lost on account of rain but the continual downpour has failed to dampen their enthusiasm. Instead it has whetted their appetites for the opening of the season one week from today and it is a gay, confident outfit Bucky Harris is leading home after six weeks of training.

There is a growing feeling among the players that they might be the surprise of the league this year. And the new set of odds posted yesterday by Vack Doyle, the Broadway betting commissioner, has served to bolster this confidence.

Doyle, who during the winter rated the Nationals no better than a seventh-place outfit and offered 100 to 1 that they wouldn't finish first, now rates them as a fifth-placer on the strength of their showing in the Grapefruit League and has lowered his odds against them finishing first to 20 to 1.

With Buck Newsom pitching brilliant ball and Earl Whitehill and Ed Linke not far behind him, and with the club pounding opposition pitchers at a terrific rate, the club was the sensation of the Grapefruit League.

Big League Record Best.

ing home with a record of 11 won and 6 lost, but when only their affairs with major league teams are considered, the record is even better. Against big league foes—such teams as the Boston Red Sox, Detroit Tigers and St. Louis Cardinals—the team won eight and lost only four for a .666 average.

Counting all games, they are coming home in unsettled condition. Two outfield berths, the catcher's job and one second-string pitching portfolio have not yet been decided. Jimmy Stone, Carl Reynolds and Dee Miles still are fighting over squatter's rights in right field. Jake Powell is facing a new threat of loss of his job unless he reforms shortly and Walter Millies, the new catcher, is having a double-barreled fight with Cliff Bolton and Bill Starr over a catcher's job.

Millies is expected to lose a decision to Bolton because Cliffy's bat is beginning to speak in his favor and Cliffy's bat, as you know, can speak very convincingly once

Maj. Leonard Ineligible For Post

Officer Is Not a Legal Resident; Forced to Decline.

Claude W. Owen Offered Place on D. C. Boxing Commission.

MAJ. HENRY LEONARD, prominent sports figure and attorney, yesterday was forced to decline a bid to serve on the District Boxing Commission because he is not legally a resident of Washington.

The post to be left vacant when the resignation of Chairman Fred Buchholz takes effect April 24 will be offered to Claude W. Owen, former president of the Washington Board of Trade, The Post has learned.

Maj. Leonard maintains his official residence in Colorado. The Congressional measure legalizing boxing here states specifically that commissioners must have been residents of the District for at least three years prior to appointment, a fact which was not taken into consideration when Maj. Leonard was selected to serve on the governing board.

The man to whom the boxing commissionership next will be offered was born in Gaithersburg, Md. He was 50 years old last month

Di Maggio Has Eye on Batting Title

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, April 6.—Joe Di Maggio, the Yanks' $50,000 outfield rookie, sat in his hotel room today nursing a fried left hoof and talking about winning the American League batting championship.

"Oh—not this season, of course," cautioned the 21-year-old San Francisco Italian. "But that's my one big ambition: to win the league's batting championship ultimately."

Black-haired Di Maggio, who has the forehead and eyes of England's new King Edward and the prominent schnozzola and big mouth of Milton Berle, laughed down the foot injury that may keep him out of the Yanks' opener with Washington on the 14th.

"What the hell," he said. "That foot'll be airight in ten days or so. That's what Dr. Harry Jacobi told me today. Then I'll be ready to go places. Of course no ball player likes to get hurt, but you just have to take injuries as they come. I'm not a bit discouraged. And I'm not kicking—not with that foot there—anyway."

Florence, S. C., April 6 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers and the Cincinnati Reds played 7 1-3 innings of scoreless baseball here today, to the accompaniment of rain and black clouds that finally caused the game to be called. Schoolboy Rowe, for the Tigers, and Paul Derringer, for the Reds, each pitched three-hit ball. Gil English was at second base for the Tigers. Charley Gehringer is nursing a back injury and Flea Clifton, who has been substituting for him, has a sore shoulder.

San Antonio, Tex., April 6 (AP).—Dizzy Dean made his second appearance this spring for the Cardinals today as his mates hammered a bevy of San Antonio hurlers for a 9-to-2 victory.

The Cards scored two runs in the first inning and three in the third to make the task easier for the erstwhile holdout who had heavy going in an exhibition game last week.

Nashville, Tenn., April 6 (AP).—Ben Chapman, longest holdout in the history of the New York Yankees, signed his 1936 contract today. He had previously come to terms with Manager Joe McCarthy via long distance telephone to his home in Atlanta.

The fleet outfielder will receive $10,000, which is $2,000 less than he got last year. But, at the option of McCarthy, Chapman will get a $2,000 bonus for good behavior this year.

Today's game with Nashville was called off because of bad weather. The Yankees held a two-hour workout, in which Chapman took part.

Vicksburg, Miss., April 6 (AP).—Behind steady, five-hit pitching by three twirlers, the Chicago White Sox trimmed the Pittsburgh Pirates, 8-2 today.

John Whitehead, starting for the Chicagoans, allowed two hits and a run in three innings. Hutchinson took up the mound chore and granted the Bucs only one safe blow in three frames, plus a run manufactured by a hit batsman, two walks and an infield out. Wyatt allowed two hits in the last three innings.

The Sox, collecting 12 safeties, showed the most punch in the fourth, when they shoved over three runs on as many hits.

Wise Prince Takes Bowie Feature From Dreel by Half Length

Daily Double Pays $105 To a Few

Malispina Wins First, Pays $20.30; Bay Buddy Scores.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

BOWIE RACE TRACK, Md., April 6.—Wise Prince, whose sire and dam, Wise Counsellor and Grace Troxler, were consistent winners over Maryland tracks, gathered enough momentum in the stretch here this afternoon to annex the Sagamore Handicap, the feature event. Splashing through the mud, Wise Prince answered the urging of Carl Hanford to take a half-length decision from Dreel, the Vanderbilt color bearer, at the end of the 6-furlong grind.

Third money in the vest pocket field of five went to Steel Cutter, representing the interests of Townsend B. Martin.

The running time of 1:14 was creditable under the conditions. Rains early this morning left the track a "sea of mud" in all the time-worn phrase suggests. Overhead it was a good day for racing. Top coats were excess baggage and despite the fact that the skies frowned there was no rain up to the moment of the feature race.

5,000 See Race.

Some 5,000 regular and occasional customers visited the Prince Georges plant. Many played the daily double but few were chosen over rather close the winning combination of Malispina in the first race and Dormido in the third. The smiling persons who did gather at the pay-off windows carried away $105.20 for each $2 investment.

Malispina, a filly from the Vanderbilt barn which was reported to be of little value, fooled Trainer Bud Stotler and a majority of the bettors in the first race when she came from behind to defeat, among others, The Sage Stable's Tweedy and Mrs. Damon Runyon's Tapon. Malispina was off slowly, but circled the leaders in the early stretch and then came on to pass Tweedy, which set most of the pace. The winner paid $20.30.

Jockey Ray Rides 2 Winners.

The white dots on black of Walter O'Hara's Araho Stables were borne to victory in the second race by Ray Buddy, son of the mud running Bud Lerner and ridden by Jockey W. Ray. Ray Buddy took command by cutting through on the rail at the stretch turn, but had to be ridden out to stave off the closing rush of Wanderl, a long shot. Parva Stella, the Vanderbilt filly, was third in the field of eight. Ray Buddy paid $7.40.

Dormido, the medium of some heavy betting, made a show of his field in the third race, bouncing to the wire on the outside after a spare over a nose battle between Penisee and Gay Ship for the place and money. This was Jockey Ray's second winner of the day and the mutuel was $7.50. River Rose set a swift pace before stopping to a walk in the stage.

The fourth race proved a gallop for Tragen, making his first start since a campaign in Florida. Ridden by Jimmy Lynch, Tragendale went to the front soon after the break and was allowed to run only enough to hold John D. Sr. at bay. Smith closed much ground to take third money. The winner was sold regarded at a $6.80 mutuel.

538 Mutuel in Finale.

Dandy Dan, last to finish in a thrilling finish with Repeal which marked the windup of the sixth race. Overstimulate was third. Repeal, in front most of the way, dropped head it was a good day for racing. with Bill Bennings.

Dear Al:

I'd like to hide this column behind that four-column ad over there on that other page but it looks as if I'll have to take it and like it. The Bennings horses have been running during the past two days—running nowhere in particular. I have had plenty of company, however. The press box here is sounding off the growls by the yard and so hot are the boys that I expect to see the top melt off the place any minute. The stewards went into action today and had at least one trainer on the pan. But that is not helping the Bennington. There has been a variety of reasons why my horses have not been winning but mostly because I have been picking the wrong horses. I would like to pick up a little luck somewhere. I moved Clocker Mike around this afternoon like a pawn on a chess board but that didn't do any good. Finally I asked him point-blank if he was jinxing me. Of course, he denied it. BILL.

First race—Cablegram, one that's entered here, has been making the clockers' eyes bulge. Gets in light and may win at the first asking.

Hiatus appears to be the one to beat off that last. Can Rock will like the track and may be dangerous.

Second race—Acastaw seems to have found the spot for another victory. He handles weight well and is as fit as that last. I see no reason for mistakes. Little Arpo, a winner last out, and Minton to take care of the others.

Third race—Blue Alice ran a fair race last out here and that effort would suggest a win in this company. Chief opposition should come from Election, a brisk worker from the popular Vanderbilt barn. Eagles Boy's last was a beaut.

Fourth race—Royal Folly made a sharp move in that recent race here. Did little chance to win after the start, but showed me enough to warrant a shot for a long price. Elconiento and Beaver Lake for the place and show.

Fifth race—Talked About raced well in Florida and is bred to like the track and may be dangerous.

Plan Proposes To Reorganize Kreuger & Toll

New Company Expects to Issue Stock for Debentures.

Yesterday the two protective committees for Kreuger & Toll secured debentures filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission a joint definitive plan of readjustment for the secured debenture holders. This constitutes the first formal step looking toward the creation of a reorganized enterprise out of the various Kreuger bankruptcies which followed the suicide of Ivar Kreuger in March, 1932.

The plan contemplates the formation of a new company to conserve the interests of holders of $47,541,500 outstanding principal amount of the secured debentures. The primary purpose of the proposed new company would be to acquire at the foreclosure sale the bond collateral behind the secured debentures, or that part of it for which adequate bids might not be made by others, and thereupon administer it in the best interests of depositors who will become the stockholders.

The collateral is held at present by the Marine Midland Trust Co., of New York, the debenture trustee, but legal steps looking toward a foreclosure sale are under way.

Shares of the new company, if the proposed plan becomes effective, will be issued initially to the two protective committees in proportion to the secured debentures deposited with them, pending ultimate distribution to the depositors.

The proposed members of the board of directors of the new company are Grayson M.-P. Murphy and Bainbridge Colby, the chairmen of the two committees, Pemberton Berman of New York, Petrus Brundell, of Stockholm, Walter Carter, of London; Hugh Kindersley, of London; Jean Monnet, of New York, Eugene Regard, of Paris, Lindsay Rogers of New York, James R. Sheffield of New York, Rodolphe Speich of Zurich, and Jacob Wallenberg, of Stockholm.

Gen. American Investors.

New York, April 6.—General American Investors Co., Inc., reports for the first quarter an increase of $2,244,964 in net assets applicable to the debentures and capital stock. During the quarter there was a net profit (after taxes) of $1,102,898 on securities sold and an increase of $1,696,428 in unrealized appreciation on securities held.

Cotton Irregular On Market Plan

New York, April 6 (AP).—Uncertainty as to the effects of the marketing program for Government-financed cotton was reflected by irregularity in the futures market today. Closing quotations were 3 or 4 points up from the lowest on near months and at about the best prices of the day on later deliveries. Trading turned quiet after execution of early orders.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Improve in Moderate Trading; Motors and Steels Lead; Franc Stronger.

New York, April 6.—Financial markets began with auspicious openings, but while the good prices paid in the early trading held, not much further improvement could be made. Bonds were firm, with a tendency of Government issues to drag. May wheat closed a quarter of a cent higher at 94⅛ cents a bushel. Cotton was slightly easier. Stock turnover was around 2,000,000 shares.

Motor and steel stocks set the pace, but most of the advance was made in the first two hours. Afternoon trading was largely given over to holding the gains. Steel and General Motors reached new high prices. Motors as a group sold at the best prices since 1929. When the rise in steels and motors began to die, the rails and coppers came forward, but they caused no great rush to buy.

At the best prices the railroad leaders were up a point or so. As usual, Central, Santa Fe, Delaware & Hudson and Pennsylvania were in front. Pittsburgh & West Virginia continued active, but lost little on profit taking. Northern Pacific was strong. Anaconda and Kenncott were rushed into new high ground on large volume. Cerro de Pasco rallied, but Smelters was backward.

Public utilities showed sime signs of life in the final hour, but the voltage was rather low. The best were Engineers Public Service, American Power, North American and Consolidated Edison. Oils were irregular, Jersey being the only bright spot. Mail orders were firm and farm implements, on the favorable reports from the steel industry, spurted from 1 to 4 points, with Case in the lead. Pullman was strong. Airplanes were sluggish.

Softer prices in the generally firm market were paid for Armstrong Cork, Distillers-Seagrams, Fairbanks preferred, Fajardo Sugar, General American Transport, Greyhound, Ingersoll Rand and International Paper preferred. Their losses ranged from 1 to 5 points.

Ticker Ticks.

At the opening prices steel was an eighth of a point up on General Motors and both were nearly four points ahead of Standard Oil, although Standard reached 70 a fortnight ago—before either steel or motors could make it. . . . Probably the rise in steel recently has done more for Allied Chemical than has the chemical business, in so far as firing the market imagination is concerned. In the same way du Pont at times is swayed by the motor industry to the exclusion of chemicals. . . . A holder of Colgate and Woolworth writes the agony column to inquire why those stocks don't move. Both, he says, represent good companies, but they have lost touch with the market. As for Woolworth, its March sales were nearly 4 per cent under a year ago, although the first three months shows only a slight fall from last year. Some business was lost last month because of the floods. . . . Greyhound, which lost a point Saturday, fell off two or three this morning in a general strong market. The specter of lower railroad passenger fares in the East and some fare reductions already in effect on the bus lines were given as the cause of selling.

Supreme Court.

Markets had hoped for a Supreme Court decision in the Guffey coal case, and naturally anticipated one against the Government. All that was salvaged of importance from the day's readings was the decision setting back the SEC in its attempt to exercise authority in the J. Edward Jones oil royalty case. Inasmuch as neither the merits of the royalty cases nor the constitutionality of the SEC were touched upon, the case had little of value, beyond the reminder which the court gave the SEC, in rather sharp terms, that it was not an absolute despot without obligation to consider ordinary rights.

Improvement Continues.

Strain from the war talk abroad continued to lessen and the improvement in the French franc at the same time helped to direct the interest of the financial community to the domestic industrial position. The situation from all the evidence continues to improve, and the hardening of stock market prices reflects realization of that fact.

Among the day's contribution to the better feeling was the evidence from the steel industry. That came from two sources. One was the weekly estimate of the American Iron and Steel Institute, which placed this week's operating rate at 64½ per cent of capacity, a rise of 4 per cent on the week and the highest level since the summer of 1930. A year ago the industry was jogging along at only 43 per cent of capacity. With the interruption to operations because of the floods behind it, the industry now is looking forward to considerable rehabilitation work, in addition to the usual spring business from the railroads, the motor industry, the farmers and building construction.

This was the day of the annual stockholders' meeting of the United States Steel Corporation, and Chairman Myron C. Taylor had some encouraging things to tell. The operating rate of the corporation is running close to that of the industry as a whole and about 50 per cent greater than a year ago. "If one considers the accumulated need of the country for steel for replacement purposes due to ordinary wear and tear as well as to obsolescence in all the capital goods industries, the conclusion is inescapable that either now or very soon in the future these needs must be satisfied," he said, "else all commerce and all industry in the Nation will suffer very great injury." Mr. Taylor said he was hopeful that improvement would continue.

Major Angas Gives 10 Rules For Investing

Do Not Buy in a Boom, Says Prophet of Coming Boom Here.

New York, April 6.—In a new book just published, "Investment for Appreciation," Maj. L. L. B. Angas, author of "The Coming American Boom," says it is not difficult to learn a sound set of economic principles; in the long run, indeed, one would almost certainly make money if one had the self-control to obey, continuously and rigorously, the following few rules:

"1. Never to buy into a company whose last published profits showed a decline.

"2. Never to buy into an industry whose profits had been rising for more than four years.

"3. Only to buy when the stock exchange was slack, and when shares in general had been falling for say ten weeks (i. e., during conjunctural depressions).

"4. Never to buy during stock exchange booms, and never to buy into booming industries.

"5. Never to buy unless current earnings were 8 per cent on market price.

"6. Never to buy an ordinary (common) share if the bank rate was over 5 per cent.

"7. Never to buy an ordinary share during a fall in national profits.

"8. To cut all losses of 20 per cent.

"9. To conserve two-thirds of all paper profits over, say, 20 per cent.

"10. To buy low-rate-of-interest long-term bonds if the above conditions were not fulfilled.

"Any investor who went abroad for 20 years," he adds, "and instructed his agent not to break these rules except under serious penalty to himself, would almost certainly reap large profits in the course of a very few years. To stay at home and attentively manage one's own affairs is, however, an entirely different matter. An investor working for himself does not mind the responsibility of occasionally taking unscientific risks. He makes exceptions to his known good rules, and therefore often loses."

3% Issue to Refund Federal Land 4½%s

By the Associated Press.

Refunding of $185,000,000 in Federal Land Bank bonds at a saving of 1½ per cent in the annual interest charges was announced yesterday by Gov. W. I. Myers of the Farm Credit Administration. The FCA head said he would call the $185,000,000 in individual bonds bearing 4½ per cent interest today. The plan contemplates a new issue of $180,000,000 in 3 per cent consolidated bonds to be offered to the public April 8. Myers said the 4½ per cent bonds would be retired with the proceeds of the new issue and with cash. The new bonds are callable in ten years and will reach maturity in 20 years.

Bad Weather Advances Wheat

Chicago, April 6 (AP).—Wheat prices climbed a cent a bushel maximum today, largely because of persistent unfavorable weather for progress of the domestic winter crop southwest and west.

Wheat closed firm at the same as Saturday's finish to ⅞ higher, May 94⅛-¼, July 84¾-⅞, corn ¼-⅝ down, May 59⅜-½, oats ⅛ off to ⅛ up, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 7 cents.

Taylor Defends High Salaries Of Steel Heads

Qualified Men Difficult to Obtain, Says U. S. Corp. Chairman.

By the Associated Press.

Hoboken, N. J., April 6.—Myron C. Taylor, chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation, defended salaries received by the corporation's executives at the thirty-fifth annual stockholder's meeting today, asserting that it was difficult to get "good men."

His comment was in answer to an attack on salaries paid to the corporation's leading officers launched by Homer Wakefield, a preferred stockholder.

Wakefield said that Taylor in 1934 received "the princely sum of $161,000," notwithstanding the fact the preferred shareholders were receiving "2 per cent instead of the 7 per cent which they were entitled to." This, he said, was in spite of the fact that the corporation's steel operations have risen. Taylor, in his address to the stockholders, had disclosed that the corporation was operating at the highest level since 1930.

In answering Wakefield's charges Taylor raised his voice and shook his fist, saying, "this charge—without knowing what is involved—I don't like—I resent it."

In discussing the question of official's salaries, Taylor said; "there is a competitive condition in getting good men." It is a problem of demand for men of necessary qualifications and the limited number of such men available. There are required men of great experience, technical knowledge and a high degree of accuracy of judgment. Such men are not easy to find. They are comparatively rare and their services are in great demand."

$895 Is Cost of Steel To Repair Chain Bridge

Steel for repair of Chain Bridge will be made for the District for $895 under terms of a bid submitted yesterday by the American Bridge Co., of Baltimore. The bid was the only one which met specifications. Contract is expected to be awarded in a few days. Repair work must await receipt of the steel. The bridge is an old-style one and the required steel parts must be made. It is expected the repair work will take more than a month. Meanwhile the bridge will be kept closed to vehicular traffic.

Col. E. B. Wills Dead Following A Long Illness

2 Nephews Survive Former Official in Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Col. Eugene Bibb Wills, 71, former conference secretary in the Department of Internal Revenue, died Sunday at his home in the Baronet Apartments, 1737 H street northwest, after a long illness.

Born in St. Louis, Mo., on April 28, 1865, he was the son of John Willis Wills and Eliza Helm Wills, of Russellville, Ky. He was a graduate of Bethel College there.

After graduation he joined a banking firm in his home town. He also served in the National Guard, and in 1891 he was appointed colonel by Gov. John Young Brown of Kentucky.

In 1885 he came to Washington to work in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, which was then under the Treasury Department. In 1914 he resigned to accept a position in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, where he served until he resigned in 1935. For 17 years of this time he was conference secretary. He was a member of the Metropolitan Club.

He is survived by two nephews, Lucien Browder, of Russellville, and Merion Browder, of Louisville, Ky.

Funeral services will be held in the Trinity Episcopal Church in Russellville.

Dr. Cory, Friend of Lincoln, Observes 90th Anniversary

Dr. Azro Jackson Cory, oldest resident of Takoma Park, Md., a close friend of Abraham Lincoln, celebrated his nineteenth birthday yesterday at his home, 107 Chestnut avenue, Takoma Park, Md. He built the second house in Takoma Park, when he moved there in 1884, paying 2 cents a foot for the land.

After a hearty dinner with a group of 15 members of his family, he passed the afternoon playing contract bridge and in recounting tales of his younger days to wide-eyed grandchildren, who can appreciate the homely "Abe" the more because of the personal touch of their grandfather's reminiscences.

Dr. Cory, he was Capt. Cory then, commanded the troops which guarded the body of the martyred President while he lay in state in Ohio. He served in the Union Army in the War Between the States.

A patent exainer in the agricultural implement division of the United States Patent Office for 40 years, he retired at the age of 74 to his home in Takoma Park, there to indulge in his hobbies of gardening and painting.

His flowers, as well as his paintings, have brought visitors from long distances to admire their beauty. Until about two years ago, when he suffered a severe attack of pneumonia, he was very active in civic affairs of Takoma Park.

Dr. Cory was born in Ironton, Ohio. A few years ago he celebrated his golden wedding anniversary with his wife, Mrs. Marie Matheson Cory. He has two sons, Dr. Ernest N. Cory, of the University of Maryland, and Dr. Robert Cory, of Baltimore, an official of the Maryland State health department, and four grandchildren.

Mrs. Anna Hodges Funeral Conducted

Funeral services were held at her home yesterday for Mrs. Anna Hamlin Hodges, 62, of 5 East Kirke street, Chevy Chase, Md., who died Saturday after a six-weeks' illness. Burial was in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Mrs. Hodges was the wife of Vernon E. Hodges, patent lawyer. A native of Minneapolis, Minn., she had been a resident of Chevy Chase 35 years.

She was a member of the Chevy Chase Women's Club, the Chevy Chase Reading Class and a former president of the Chevy Chase Needlework Society. She was also a member of the Twentieth Century Club of Washington and belonged to the Florence Crittendon organization.

Besides her husband she leaves a daughter, Miss Helen E. Hodges; three sons, Emerson Hodges, H. Hamlin Hodges and Vernon S. Hodges, and a sister, Mrs. Theodore B. Elton, of Grand Forks, N. Dak.

Kipling Leaves $775,000.

London, April 6 (AP).—Rudyard Kipling was shown today by the probate of his will to have left an estate of £155,228 ($775,000) gross value. The house and land at Burwash and the income from his residual estate was left to his widow.

Life Sentence Is Given Myers In Wilson Case

Cummings to Decide if He Will Be Released to Begin State Term.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Rockville, Md., April 6.—Ernest Wellington Myers, Baltimore gunman and racketeer, today was sentenced to life imprisonment in Maryland State Penitentiary for the part he played in the "mistaken identity" murder of Allen B. Wilson, newspaper route carrier, on October 23, 1924.

As it became known here that Myers has been linked with a second murder, that of a Baltimore policeman, the chalky-faced gangster heard Chief Judge Hammond Urner doom him to spend the rest of his days behind the bars.

Myers took the sentence, which was mandatory after a jury last week had found him guilty of the crime, without capital punishment, with no display of emotion.

"Do you have anything to say before sentence is pronounced?" asked Judge Urner.

Myers did no stand. He merely shook his head. The judge then imposed sentence and Myers was returned to the jail atop the courthouse here, where he will be held until Attorney General Homer S. Cummings determines whether the Baltimore gangster will be released from his Federal term to begin his State term.

From authoritative sources here it was learned that Myers will be accused of the murder of John Blank, Baltimore policeman. Blank was shot to death February 11, 1934, by one of three men he surprised robbing the H. L. Carpel Co., of Baltimore.

Myers was serving a term at Lorton Reformatory for a Federal offense when he was released to the State of Maryland for trial for murder. If the Attorney General rules he must servie out his time, a detainer will be placed against him and he will be taken to State Penitentiary at Baltimore as soon as he is released from the reformatory.

Deportation Is Awaited By Dillenger's Nemesis

Chicago, April 6 (AP).—Her legal battle to evade deportation abandoned, Mrs. Anna Sage, "the woman in red" who claimed to have put John Dillinger "on the spot" for police and Federal agents, today awaited removal to her native Rumania.

With the announcement by her attorney, Thomas J. Johnson, jr., that no further action would be taken to circumvent the deportation order, Fred J. Schlotfeldt, district director of the Bureau of Immigration, said Mrs. Sage would be started out of the country on the next train carrying undesirable aliens, probably on April 25.

Lack of funds, Attorney Johnson said, has compelled Mrs. Sage to give up the court battle.

Colombian Bondholders.

New York, April 6.—The Colombian bondholders committees for the Republic of Colombia now have available for distribution a circular summarizing the fiscal position of the departments and municipalities of Colombia, which can be obtained from the secretary of the committee, 120 Wall Street, New York City.

Australia Makes Plans To Balance U. S. Trade

Canberra, Australia, April 6 (AP).—A sub-committee convened by the federal cabinet today considered means of redressing Australia's adverse balance of trade with the United States.

Two alternatives were suggested. One was to arrange quotas on specified imports which compete with Australian and British goods. The other was to increase import duties on certain items and to restrict imports of oil and gasoline, of which an ample supply is available from British sources.
